Wintario Draw to be held in Madoc

Yes, the rumours you have been hearing about a Wintario draw being held in Madoc are true. Several groups and organizations within the village have been working for years to attract Wintario, the organization responsible for our new arena, into the village. The arena committee, the Madoc and District Chamber of Commerce and the Village Council have all contacted Wintario at various times in the past years and now, the Chamber of Commerce and the Arena Committee are pleased to announce that a Wintario draw will be held in Madoc on Thursday, September 18th, at the arena. It has now been several weeks since the first meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, the arena committee and the people responsible for putting on the Wintario draw, which included several people from the Ontario Lottery Corporation and the Global Television Network. The story was not released immediately in the newspaper because several checks and other details had to be taken care of before it was absolutely certain that the draw could be held in Madoc. On Monday, July 28th, that confirmation was received by Doug Parks, the village clerk and the contact person for the arena.

This event will be the first of its kind in this area for a community the size of Madoc. Wintario draws have been held in larger centres around the area but never in a community as small as Madoc, although towns of similar size have hosted draws in other parts of the province. Members of the arena committee and the Chamber of Commerce are hoping that this will be the type of event that will see the arena filled to capacity and that will be supported by everyone, both in the village and the outlying areas. While it may seem to the everyday person that there is not much work to organizing a show of this magnitude, once you know the details of the show, it will become apparent that this is a major project and that it will take the co-operation of both organizations involved and, indeed, a great many other people in and around the village to make the project a success. From this point onwards until the actual show is over, many people will be putting in a great deal of extra time and effort to put on a show that everyone in Madoc will be proud of and that will be an accurate portrayal of what life in and around Madoc is actually like.

Many of the finer details of the show have not yet been ironed out, as both the arena committee and the Chamber of Commerce have been awaiting the official confirmation from the Ontario Lottery Corporation. A joint meeting of the Chamber of Commerce representatives and the Arena Committee will be held on Tuesday, August 5th, at which time each organization will establish their group's particular involvement and, if further assistance is required, that too will be arranged. At the present time, it appears that the Chamber of Commerce will be responsible for the one hour pre-show of local talent and family entertainment that will precede the actual Wintario draw. The Arena Committee will be responsible for preparations for the actual Wintario draw portion of the program. The doors of the arena will probably open at 7 p.m., with the pre-show scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m. This will allow the pre-show to end at 8:30 p.m. so that the Wintario people will have one half hour prior to the draw to complete their warm-up and final technical check. The Wintario people will arrive in Madoc about noon on Thursday, September 18th, to begin their technical set-up.

Both organizations feel that this will be an excellent opportunity to show the rest of Ontario what Madoc has to offer and will be a good chance for the community to work together towards a common goal. Proceeds from the show will go towards a new ice-making machine for the arena. At the present time, it has not been established what the ticket price will be, but both groups agree that the price should be kept as low as possible to allow everyone to attend the program. Wintario has suggested that ticket prices should be anywhere from $1.00 to $3.00 and that a Wintario ticket could be included in the price of admission. This decision will likely be made within the very near future and final details will be announced in this paper when they become available.

Since Heritage House was established in Madoc at the beginning of the summer, people have continued to support the efforts of the three students who have been overseeing the project. Now, with less than a month remaining before it closes again, these students feel that they have the house and its displays organized the way the people of Madoc and area would like it. Thanks to the many people who have assisted by lending or outright donating artifacts to the museum, they now have four complete rooms of displays, with a Madoc pump organ and a Madoc sewing machine included in the displays. The students would now like to see a permanent museum established in Madoc and have found many people to support their idea, but, if a permanent museum is to become a reality, every organization and individual in the community will have to support the project.

Heritage House closing this month

If you haven't been into Heritage House to see the many displays and artifacts yet, you had better make it a point to see it before August 22nd. That is the date when Heritage House will be closing. On that day the house will be open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and the students that have done such a great job of organizing and establishing the house hope to have the Frank Howard Orchestra, a mini concert, a senior citizen sing-a-long, pony rides, 5 cents lemonade, coffee, donuts and tours throughout the day so that as many people as possible will have a chance to see the house and its contents before it closes.

The students will start returning donated articles between the 25th and 28th of August. Anything that was permanently donated to the house will also be put in storage in the hope that a permanent museum will eventually be established in Madoc.

For those of you who have not yet seen the interior of this memorial to Madoc's past, you must make it a point to visit the house before the 22nd of August. You'll like many other people, will be very surprised at the quality and quantity of displays these enterprising students have managed to arrange in such a short period of time. There are now four rooms full of displays plus a very interesting display on the porch. And if you visited the house early in its existence, make it a point to go back and see some of the new additions to the displays. Two recent additions have proved to be the pride and joy of the three students, Tracey Morrison, Carol Whitman and Doug Adams.

A Madoc pump organ and a Madoc sewing machine have been added to the displays. That's right, an organ and a sewing machine that were made in Madoc are now on display. The organ was made by the Church and Connolly Company in 1887 while the sewing machine was made by the same company in 1897. Both still work and the sewing machine was used up Possible market for some of Deloro's waste?

BY PATRICK REDICAN

There's a possibility that someone might want some of that mess at the former Deloro Smelting and Refining site.

An American company - Nedlog Technology Group Inc. of Colorado is interested enough in the eight to ten thousand tons of calcium arsenate lying around the property to send a representative to Deloro next month to take a look at it and begin an evaluation of the quality of the calcium arsenate.

Nedlog is a recycling and recovery business; according to Jim Wolfe of Nedlog, they would take the calcium arsenate and turn it into arsenic trioxide, a product used in wood preservatives and herbicides.

Whether or not Nedlog does take the calcium arsenate - and whether they pay to get it or are paid to take it - depends on the quality of the calcium arsenate.

"At this point it's very tentative," said Mr. Wolfe. "We don't want to get anyone's hopes up; we don't want anyone to get the idea that this is a certainty, a lot remains to be done."

"We do have an interest. But we haven't had a chance to do any testing and that has to be done next. I'm interested in working with the owner (Erickson Construction) and the Ministry of Environment to evaluate the material and see if it's commercially viable to transport the material to our processing plant.

Mr. Wolfe said that he would be coming out in early September to start the ball tolling. "We'll do all the evaluation work at our expense. It's not going to cost anybody anything."

Mr. Wolfe and Nedlog became involved in the Deloro matter when an individual whose family comes from the area and who works for a large Canadian mining concern in their sales corporation took a personal interest in the clean-up. He contacted Nedlog and the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and arranged for a sample of the calcium arsenate to be shipped out to Nedlog.

That original sampling was not very promising, according to Mr. Wolfe, but it was too small to really tell the story. "It was not really encouraging, but it doesn't really give us a good idea. Certainly when I talked to the owner he felt there was a lot of highgrade material there."

If the calcium arsenate is of a high enough quality that Nedlog feels it is worth processing, another factor enters the picture - who will pay to ship it from Deloro to Wyoming where the Nedlog processing plant is? Mr. Wolfe indicated that, depending on the quality of the material, Nedlog might only be willing to take it if the Ministry of the Environment paid part or even all of the costs of shipping - which might run $500,000 or more.

"We'll go as far as possible to pay our share. It all depends on the grade, just what it's worth to us."

The advantage of selling or giving the material to Nedlog, even at a cost to the ministry would be:

- (1) It would take it away from Deloro once and for all;
- (2) It would make use of the material;
- (3) Whatever waste there was from that process would come under the control of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and according to Mr. Wolfe, be disposed of at a licensed E.P.A. dump. Mr. Wolfe emphasized that it would not be a matter of simply dumping our garbage somewhere else.

The calcium arsenate is only a small part of the waste at Deloro. The Ministry of the Environment's Jack Pruner, who is in charge of operations at Deloro and has been dealing with Nedlog is away on holidays and was not available for his comments on the matter.

The ministry has in its hands a consultant's report on the Deloro clean-up operation; it will probably release it in the next few weeks.

Quilt draw winner

On July 19th, Elvin Holland of R.R. 5, Madoc, won a hand-made quilt at a Huntingdon Volunteer Fire Department draw at the Ivanhoe Town Hall. The quilt was donated to the fire department by Mrs.
Dora Morton of Thomasburg, with the proceeds of the draw to go towards new equipment for the fire department.

until about ten years ago. Both of these by-products of Madoc were donated by Mr.
Aloysius Walsh and each has the word Madoc on them. Miss Morrisson was also very excited about a stove they will be receiving this week to complete another display. "These new articles are exactly what we wanted in the house to show the residents of Madoc. We can't thank Mr.
Walsh enough for his generous donation and we just hope that as many people as possible can get in to see them before they are gone forever."

Yes, these articles so unique to Madoc's past could disappear from the area in the near future. When the museum closes, these articles will be returned to the owner and the students feel they may be lost to this area for good. "They alone are reason enough for Madoc to work towards establishing its own permanent museum.
We would like to see all the organizations and service clubs within the community work together towards the establishment of a museum so that we'll have a permanent home for articles like these. We've talked to many people around the village and there does seem to be a great deal of support for a project like this. All we need now is some organization to spearhead the project and the support of all other organizations and individuals."

It may be hard for you to imagine why these students think this is such a worthwhile project. Visit the house and see these articles and we suspect that you too will want to see a permanent museum established. These students have put too much time and effort into the house and its displays to let it be closed without some attempt to re-establish a permanent facility in the village. See it and see if you don't want it.

Gauvreaus bring mini-golf to area

Do you have too much time on your hands without school this summer?

Or maybe it's your kids who seem to be on your hands too much.

Or, perhaps your grandchildren are coming up for a few days and you want to do something that both you and they can enjoy.

Or maybe you're just looking for something different to do one evening.

Rob and Shirley Gauvreau have an answer to all of your problems - miniature golf.

The Gauvreaus, who live on the road to the KOA campgrounds just south of Highway 7 (you turn the opposite way from Deloro) opened Rob's Mini-Golf, three weeks ago.

"It's a game for the whole family," says Shirley. "Everyone from senior citizens to children can play it and have fun." "You don't have to have ever played before to do well," Rob adds, "but you can be really good at it and still find it challenging."

For people who have played before, they'll know what Rob and Shirley are talking about - mini-golf is a good, family game which everyone can compete at similar levels of skill; it involves putting a ball in eighteen mini-holes and covers an area of only a few hundred square yards.

Rob says that more and more people are coming in from the surrounding area to try it out. "We've had people from Havelock and Madoc; the biggest problem is with people who don't know what it is; they think they have to know something about golf to be able to play."

Rob and Shirley came to Marmora five years ago from London - mini-golf is very popular in western Ontario - following Sheila's parents, John and Sheila Greepside. "I've thought about putting it in a couple of years ago and then decided to wait. I was surprised that no one did it in the meantime, so I set it up," said Rob, who works at Proctor and Gamble.

Although he bought the plans, some of the holes are of his own invention and most of the work including the carpentry - he did himself - with much help from a long list of relatives on both sides. He's done himself proud. Shirley said that a lot of people have commented on how attractive the course is and it's easy to see why - it's bright, neat imaginative and obviously done with a lot of care and craftsmanship.

The Gauvreaus say that, for a group of four, it takes about 45 minutes to cover the course; the cost is $1.50 and $1.00 for under 12's (putter and ball are, of course, provided). They'll be operating all summer, and as long after that as the weather stays warm.

For a lot of fun only a few minutes drive away, what more could you ask?

Dr. Janitch

Madoc and areas new veterinarian is prepared to suit his practice to the needs of the area.

Since July 23rd, Madoc and the surrounding area has had a new veterinarian set up his practice within the village limits. Dr. William Janitch has based his practice in the Madoc area and will have his office in the old Whytock house across from the dairy. Dr. Janitch doesn't quite know what to expect as far as medical requirements from the community, but adds that he is willing to set up his practice to suit the needs of the community.

boy to the Madoc area, he was born and raised in Belleville. He attended Moira Secondary School in Belleville before attending the University of Toronto and the University of Guelph, where he obtained his Bachelor of Science and then his Doctorate of Veterinary Medicine. During the summers while he was still getting his education, Dr. Janitch was employed by the federal government in Moncton and at Alta Vista in Ottawa. After completing his education, he worked for one year with Dr. Harry Burns of Belleville but eventually decided that he would be happier trying to establish his own practice rather than working for someone else.

"Although I enjoyed working for Dr. Burns, I felt I had to make the move to establish my own business while I was still young. I feel that it might have been harder for me to tolerate the debt load created by establishing my own practice once I was older and, having driven through Madoc many times, I felt this was the place for me to try and put my plans into operation."

Dr. Janitch became aware of the Whytock house and fell in love with it immediately. "I build furniture for myself in my spare time and this house is ideal for that type of furnishing. The old oak decor and trim in this house is what I like best about it." While he is remodelling and redecorating much of the inside of the house, he is trying to keep all of the things in the house that he sees as strong points exactly the way they are or restore them to their former beauty. "The Moira River Conservation Authority have helped me in any way they could and their help has really been appreciated."

As we said before, the public will dictate the type of service that Dr. Janitch will supply. His present plans include a reception area, a general treatment and pharmaceutical room, an examination room, radiology facilities, overnight compartments for animals and, eventually, he hopes to set up a surgical unit, depending on the demand. Many of these facilities are already underway but it could be one to two months before he has all of them into operation. "Because I don't really know what kind of demands are made on a veterinarian in this area, I don't really know what services to offer. In the beginning, I'll try to offer just about everything but, as time goes on and I see what the people in this area need, I'll suit their needs with my practice." He has presently established office hours from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Monday to Friday, and Saturday from 9 a.m. to 12 a.m. for small animals and he will be on call twenty-four hours a day for seven days of the week.

Dr. Janitch is affiliated with the Belleville Animal Hospital, where he will do his surgery until he has his unit set up. He is also allied with the Veterinary Service in Brighton for further diagnosis and aid.

"I think I am well suited to serving the needs of this community," Dr. Janitch told us during the interview. "My favorite animal is the dairy cow and I have some background in surgery, which will assist me in the small animal category. You can't specialize during your schooling to become a veterinarian, so I have general knowledge that should assist me in a practice such as this. And, if I find that I am offering a service that is not required in this area, I'll drop that and concentrate on other areas."

...and he does house calls, too!

Dr. William Janitch is now establishing his veterinary business in Madoc, with his office located at the old Whytock house across from the Madoc Dairy. He has worked with another doctor in Belleville but recently decided to establish his own business while he was still young. Having travelled through and around Madoc, he decided that this was where he would like to live and work.

Dr. Bill Janitch is pictured here while he checks a dog in his office at the Whytock House and while administering to this sick cow. The dairy cow is one of Dr. Janitch's favorite animals, but he is hoping to establish his practice around the needs of the community.

Why We Sell For Less —

- 1. NO SALESMEN.
No commissions, no high pressure, serve yourself and save money. Most commission sales people make 5% to on a $700 purchase, that's $35 you could save.
- 2. NO BIG SALARIES.
Our staff work on a profit sharing arrangement.
- 3. LOW RENT.
We don't have the high expense of a plaza, mall or shopping centre.
- 4. LOW OVERHEAD.
We have eliminated most high expenses that other stores carry. No display, most of our items are in factory sealed cartons.
- 5. ADVERTISING.
Word of mouth recommendations will be our major advertising. Once our lower prices become general knowledge.
- 6. NO SALES.
We do not plan on ever holding a sale, nor will we ever have any appointed sales. Day in and day out, we will have the lowest possible prices because our overhead is lower and we take a much smaller mark up. For example, we believe it is better to make only $10.00 profit on 100 items rather than make $100.00 profit on 10 items. It is the same profit but we will have 10 times more customers who will spread the word how they saved at Wellington No Frills Furniture & Appliances. It's a simple for you to save because we understand all competition and back it with a guarantee. "Everybody likes a bargain."

Lowest Prices On Brand Names

CONSUMER INFORMATION: Dollars & Sense

"An Educated Consumer Will Be Our Best Customer"
Here's A Common Sense Approach To Saving Money... Worth Reading

- 1. SHOP around. That's the name of the game. Compare features as well as price. You'll be surprised at the difference in quality — even in name brands.
- 2. WRITE down the MAKE, MODEL, FEATURES and PRICE of the item you are interested in.
- 3. KEEP shopping until you have the lowest price you can find anywhere. Ask who makes it and compare the maker's reputation. If it's a manufacturer you don't know, ask your self whether parts and service will be available, especially used. Some stores will sell their own private brands. Remember, they are only retailers, not manufacturers. What if a maker goes out of business in far off Taiwan?
- 4. NOW telephone or come in to Wellington No Frills Furniture & Appliances and compare. Our prices will most likely actually be much lower than what you've found. If not, we will immediately adjust our price by $10.00 to $200.00 lower on the price of the item or items you are buying.
- 5. WE guarantee to save you money. Read our guarantee. We mean every word of it.
- 6. IF any of our employees should refuse to adjust the price (even on the phone), Call our General Manager immediately at 966-6700. We say "NO HASSLES" and we mean "NO HASSLES".
- 7. YOU have now done what our professional shoppers do. We also try to make certain our prices are lower. Now enjoy your savings. "A Dollar Saved Is A Dollar Earned" still applies today!

Whitney - Misuraca

Kimberley Anne Whitney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Whitney of Havelock, and Frank Misuraca, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Misuraca of Campbellford, were married May 31st at Havelock United Church. Rev. George Phillips performed the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a floor-length satin gown with a mandarin collar. The neckline and upper sleeves were of sheer illusion appliqued with lace and seed pearls. Her Juliette cap and long veil were also trimmed with lace and seed pearls. The bride carried a cascade of coral roses.

The maid of honour was Karen Whitney, the bride's sister. She wore a floor-length peach gown with a semi-bousson top, spaghetti straps and an over-the-knee length flowered jacket. The bridesmaids, wearing gowns matching the maid of honour's, were Kelli Whitney, the bride's sister, Sina Misuraca, Rita Misuraca, the groom's sisters, and Lynn Misuraca, the groom's sister-in-law. They carried bouquets of daisies and poms accented with baby's breath and tinted to match the gowns. The flowergirls were Kristi Whitney, the bride's sister and Erin Keating, niece of the bride. They wore similar gowns and carried baskets of daisies and poms.

Best man was Jim Sheridan. The ushers were Randy Whitton, John Whitney, the bride's brother, George Misuraca and Marcel Misuraca, brothers of the groom. Frank Rozic, cousin of the groom, was ringbearer.

For the reception at the Campbellford Legion, the bride's mother received guests wearing an ivory floor-length gown. The bridegroom's mother wore a floor-length gown of mint green.

Mr. and Mrs. Misuraca are living in Campbellford.

Eldoras advance in rural playdowns

The Eldorado Eldoras have kept their unbeaten season intact this weekend as they defeated Rockwood in two straight games. The Eldoras went through their regular season in the Eldorado and District League without a defeat, and eliminated both Norwood and Rockwood in two straight games in the Ontario playdowns.

On Saturday, it appeared that Rockwood would be a formidable opponent as Eldorado did not eek out the win until the eleventh inning. The final score was 3-2 Eldorado, with defense being the name of the game. Rockwood took an early 2-0 lead before Eldorado tied the score in the 6th inning. In the bottom of the eleventh inning, Ringelmann and Reid combined to drive in and score the winning run. Randy Gray pitched the complete game with ten strikeouts, five walks and seven hits. Scott Shaw, the Eldoras catcher, was tested by the Rockwood baserunners and was not found lacking. He picked five runners off while trying to steal second and also picked one runner off third as he made a move to come home and could not get back to third in time to beat the throw. Eldorado left nine runners on base throughout the game.

Because Saturday's game in Eldorado was so close, coach Cyril Shaw expected a very tough game in Rockwood on Sunday. However, the Eldoras combined steady defense with timely hitting to take the game 17-2. Gray pitched six innings and was relieved by Franks in the sixth inning. Both teams were held scoreless in the final three innings.

Coach Shaw felt the lopsided win could be attributed to many things. "Randy Gray pitched fourteen scoreless innings for us and we were able to bring in Michael Franks to relieve him for the final three innings. We also kept them off balance in Sunday's game by using the bunt to our advantage. When we asked our players to bunt, they did. When Rockwood tried to defend against the bunt, our players swung away and confused the Rockwood defense. Then, while our team got it together offensively, their team was not as aggressive on the bases as they had been the previous game because they knew Scott could pick them off the bases."

Eldorado put their offense together early in the game as they scored two runs in the first inning and added five runs in each of the third, fourth and sixth innings. Brian Willemsen and Randy Gray each hit two run home runs in the third inning to lead their team offensively, although Bateman used the bunt effectively to get on base several times. "We put our game together on Sunday while Rockwood just couldn't seem to get untracked," coach Shaw commented after the game. "Their pitcher also seemed to tire in that second game and they didn't have anyone to replace him. We were able to rest Gray in the sixth and Franks was able to hold them off the scoreboard. It was just one of those games where everything we tried worked for us."

Eldorado now advances against Ayr, team that just finished a tight series against Omagh.

NOTE: Because the details of the game with Ayr had not been finalized at press time, we cannot tell you exactly when the next series will begin. It is expected the first game will be played on Saturday, August 9th, but to find out the exact starting time and when the remainder of the games will be played, contact Cyril Shaw at 473-2166.

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT TENDER

BUILDING REMOVAL

Tenders are invited for the purchase and removal of a two-storey house, in poor condition, on Crown land, being part of Lot 31, Concession 20, Grimsby Township, County of Hastings.

Further particulars and tender forms may be obtained from: Floyd Caverly, Lands Supervisor, Ministry of Natural Resources, Tweed, Ontario. Telephone: 478-2330.

Sealed tenders will be received by the District Manager, Tweed, up until 12:00 noon, Monday, August 25, 1980.

light industry in 80s economic base, he felt that the government fell short of indicating what it intended to do about it. And the doing, he pointed out, is the difficult thing.

"We can see from our own experience here how little has been accomplished by the individual municipalities trying to get something done. The municipalities don't have the money. And the Counties won't do it. That leaves only the provincial government to provide the seed money to get this sort of thing moving."

According to Connerty we should be looking at establishing small, regional development corporations such as already exist in places as widespread as Cape Breton and Kentucky. "I'm thinking of something about the size of Centre Hastings or North Hastings, something to promote and attract industry to this area". According to Connerty an active approach is necessary. "It doesn't take much experience to see that they won't come to you. We've had a planning and development committee in Madoc for the past two years and in all that time we only got one inquiry - from a consulting firm that had a client that was looking at small towns. We didn't even find out what the company was."

Another purpose of the regional development corporations, Connerty says is that they help ensure that government programs were more relevant to smaller communities. "These programs are never tailored to small towns; these corporations could do that for them."

In all, Mr. Connerty reflects, "the conference reflected that there has been a change in which the government understands the problem. It remains to be seen whether they are prepared to change the way in which they deal with the problem."

Hazzards

One hundred and fifty years ago, before there were church buildings in Madoc Township, people gathered in their homes to read and study their Bibles.

Using the text, "Now therefore stand still that I may reason with you before the Lord, of all the saving deeds of the Lord, which He did to you and to your fathers." (1 Samuel 12:7) Dr. Clifford F. Waite, of Simcoe, addressed the large turnout of those who attended the commemoration service at Hazzards Corners Church last Sunday afternoon. "Today there is a great deal of biblical illiteracy," Dr. Waite said. The Bible stories which underline eternal truths are little known, as are the great saving deeds of God on behalf of His children. In today's technological society man takes credit for the high standard of living. We should return to the biblical recognition of how much we owe to God, for He can still save us, from our greed and pride and innate selfishness. Dr. Waite gave many real life illustrations in the course of his talk.

Misters, Young and the Brothers, a quartette from The Trentones, harmonized in several old favourites, befitting the occasion, and led the congregational singing, with Mrs. A. Ketcheson at the piano. Mr. G. Arnold Creaser conducted the worship.

Descendants of pioneers of 150 years ago, of this and other churches, were present from London, Toronto, Kingston, Cornwall, Gunter, Montreal, California, and many, many places in between, to share in the worship and to decorate with flowers the graves of revered ancestors. It was a time of warm Christian fellowship as old friendships were renewed and new friends made welcome in this historic rural church.

Ontario told to look to home renewal,

BY PATRICK REDICAN

We're used to a boom economy in Ontario. Ever since the second world war, the province has grown - more people, bigger, newer cities, more jobs, more money, more, bigger, better everything.

Until recently. Some people were shocked this year to discover that in actual economic growth last year, this province ran tenth in a ten horse race. The population actually declined last year as did the population of our largest city, Toronto. (About time)

Also on the decline, obviously, are jobs; certain sectors such as resource industries (mining and logging) and heavy industry (steel) are being especially hard hit.

Not being economists, most of us can only hopefully (and cynically) believe the politicians when they tell us things will get better. In Centre Hastings we sit and wait for the return of mining or heavy industry and the jobs they will bring to revitalize the economy. Across the province we wait for the housing market to recuperate so that the job-intensive construction industry can revive.

Apparently, we wait in vain.

At least that was an important part of the message at the Ontario Renew Conference.

Ontario Renew was a big splash put on by the Progressive Conservative Government early in June. Its aim was to gear municipalities and industry up for the 80's. One of the people attending from this area was Madoc Councillor Ian Connerty; although he had some reservations, Connerty, well-known as a Liberal, found the Tory conference "worthwhile" and came away with an impression that the Conservatives were serious about the matter and had some constructive initiatives to offer.

"Just to give an idea of how serious they were (Premier) Bill Davis was there. You don't usually see Davis at these sort of things. But it wasn't only Davis, it was (Minister of Consumer Relations) Frank Drea, (Industry and Tourism Minister) Claude Bennett and (Minister of Energy)

Bob Welch. I even saw Claude Bennett sitting in on some of the sessions. And it was a big thing. There were 1500 municipal politicians, builders, planners and consultants.

The main theme of the Ontario Renew Conference, according to Connerty, was that "we rein a post-industrial economy. The thrust of the economy in Ontario in the eighties won't be in building new houses but in renovating those already existing. And the industries that are developing are not heavy industry but light service industry."

On the one hand, he said, the conference addressed itself to the suffering building industry. Mr. Davis, apparently in spite of opposition from City of Toronto politicians and social scientists, promised to "clear away the red tape" that makes renovation push the building industry in the only direction it can go (renovation) in a situation where the population is no longer growing. Mr. Connerty said he was impressed that the government was trying in provisions for renovation with provisions for making older houses energy efficient. "Co-ordinating the two programs will go a long way towards solving two major problems in the big cities."

But of greater interest to smaller centres and therefore Mr. Connerty was the subject of revitalizing small towns and overhauling their economies. In particular Mr. Connerty was impressed with a speech by Bank of Commerce President Donald Fullerton.

What he said, essentially, was that the original purpose of many of these small towns - mining or logging - was gone and that now they're looking for industry. But even Toronto is looking for industry. Manufacturing jobs are disappearing. And what we should be looking for are service and trade jobs. We should be looking at such things as silicon chip assembly plants - light industry which can be located just as easily in Hastings County as downtown Toronto - without adding to the cost.

"The people, particularly the municipal politicians, have to realize that history won't reverse itself. The growth isn't there. They have to understand the new trends and work on optimism and light industry."

Fullerton also said that no-one was in a better position to understand the economic position of a community than the manager of the local bank. And that it was his bank's policy to encourage their managers to become deeply involved in the economic life of the community."

Mr. Connerty said that, while he could only agree that these towns needed a new Arsenic.

The killer. The murderer's favorite tool. In its most popular form, odorless, colourless and lethal. Since the Greeks, arsenic has been recognized for its ability to kill, not only quickly but also slowly. As an industrial hazard it has been linked to disease and death in those that work with it. A killer and crippler of miners, smelter workers, chimney sweeps, and more recently, as its use as an insecticide became more widespread, of farm workers and sometimes consumers.

But unless you've made yourself very unpopular and you feel someone's going to try and knock you off or you have worked very closely with arsenic you should feel confident that you're in no danger of arsenic poisoning.

Until you read 'The Arsenic Papers' by M.A. Rychlo.

"Dr. W.C. Hueper of the National Cancer Institute has warned that 'the danger of cancer hazards from the consumption of contaminated drinking water will grow considerably within the foreseeable future.' ...Arsenic, the environmental substance most clearly established as causing cancer in man, is involved in two historic cases in which polluted water supplies caused widespread occurrences of cancer. In one case the arsenic came from the slag heaps of mining operations, in the other from rock with a high natural content of arsenic."

Rachel Carson in Silent Spring, Houghton Mifflin, Boston [1962].

Mr. Rychlo, with a Masters of Environmental Engineering from the University of Western Ontario, has worked as a water quality engineer for both the Yukon and Ontario governments, and his studies and experience have led him to write this surprising book.

Basically, Mr. Rychlo attempts to draw a close link between arsenic and cancer, particularly cancers of the stomach and intestine. But even more importantly, Mr. Rychlo holds that the most dangerous source of cancer-causing arsenic is in the water we drink.

Mr. Rychlo's case - in this rather academic and statistic-ridden book is built fairly simply. First, he establishes that certain types of rock formations - bedrock and volcanically produced rock - are highest in minerals. Then, giving a rather complete thumbnail sketch of the geological development of North America, he shows why in some areas, such as the Canadian Shield and the Appalachian regions of the continent, the bedrock is much closer to the surface.

He explains that, since bedrock is soft and easily broken down, the groundwater and surface water running through this rock contains high quantities of trace minerals, including arsenic.

Having established a link between cancer and arsenic - through citing examples of various studies on exposure to arsenic and quoting from other authorities - Mr. Rychlo then turns to the lynchpin of the book.

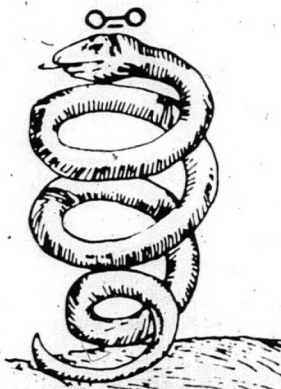

"Inorganic arsenic is probably the simplest chemical agent known to produce multiple cancers in man."

S.C. Sommers, M.D. and R.D. McManus, M.D. in Multiple Arsenical Cancers of Skin and Internal Organs, Cancer 6 [1953].

Using statistics on Canada, the United States and the province of Ontario, he manages to develop a strong link between those areas where cancer of the stomach and intestine is higher than normal and where higher levels of arsenic is found in the groundwater and surface water.

For instance in the United States higher than average levels of cancer are found largely in New England and Great Lake States, both areas where the bedrock containing arsenic are closest to the surface. In Canada, it is in British Columbia and Alberta where the bedrock is covered by many layers of newer rock, that these types of cancer are at below average levels, while in the Appalachian areas - Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and the Canadian Shield provinces - Ontario and Quebec, it is above average.

The Arsenic Papers

The most interesting - and most confusing array of statistics - comes in a series of maps and tables that try to establish a pattern of cancer in the 47 counties of southern Ontario. While the mass of information is confusing, it's clear that to some extent, Mr. Rychlo's theory holds true.

Areas where much of the water supply comes from bedrock - the Bruce Peninsula and southeastern Ontario including Hastings County - are consistently the highest rates of cancer and new cancer registrations. The Toronto area, the Ottawa area and southwestern Ontario are generally lower.

In his conclusion Rychlo calls for greater research into the relationship between arsenic and cancer. Because of the limitations of his data - he is after all, comparing counties, states and provinces, rather than areas where there is a high arsenic content in the drinking water and those where there is not - he can, in the

The map above shows the Canadian Shield in southern Ontario. Rycho argues that higher arsenic content in the shield means higher cancer rates in the area. Hastings County for instance is 25 to 30 per cent above the provincial average. The serpent pictured on this page is a reproduction of the alchemist's symbol for arsenic.

"The available studies point consistently to a causal relationship between skin cancer and heavy exposure to inorganic arsenic in drugs, in drinking-water with a high arsenic content, or in the occupational environment."

International Agency for Research on Cancer in IARC Monographs On The Evaluation of Carcinogenic Risk of Chemicals to Man: Some Inorganic And Organometallic Compounds, World Health Organization, Geneva [1973].

end, only point out where work has to be done.

Rychlo is aware too that the people who should be taking the initiative - in Ontario it would be the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Health - are dragging their feet. He points out that officials have often withheld information on arsenic poisoning or attempted to play down its effects. We've seen this at Deloro where officials have repeatedly insisted the arsenic problem is being brought under control after saying five or ten years earlier there really was no problem.

One of the most alarming things for local residents may be the gestation period for cancer caused by arsenic. Rycho repeatedly points to cases where it takes 15 to 30 years for the cancer to come in evidence. This could mean that the damage done to people working at and living near the Deloro site or drinking water from the Moira or area wells is still showing up. Mr. Rycho's statistics for new cancers are for the 1972-74 period and show cancer rates 25 to 30 percent above the rate of the province as a whole.

"It is scarcely possible...to handle arsenicals with more utter disregard to the general health than that which has been practised by our country in recent years" said Dr. W.C. Hueper, of the National Cancer Institute, an authority on environmental cancer."

Rachel Carson in Silent Spring, Houghton Mifflin, Boston [1962].

It's hard to read 'The Arsenic Papers' without being concerned; and without wondering why the book hasn't received more attention. Its limitations as popular reading are many - although it's clearly enough written, it badly needs an editor and reorganization; it's hard to know who it's aimed at - some of the geological information is for absolute beginners but the writing style is aimed at Mr. Rycho's fellow scientists.

'The Arsenic Papers' is further handicapped by being published by a small Ontario press, the Cobalt Highway Bookshop. While being a small publisher is no sin, the book has been kept in obscurity. It hasn't made it into any book directories (the James Text in Belleville, normally very reliable, couldn't find any reference to it). Furthermore, the publisher hasn't made any attempt to publicize it. He explained to me that he had sent copies to several Ministry of Environment officials which is a little like finding a skeleton in the closet and handing it over to the family dog.

'The Arsenic Papers' makes the resounding point that the relation between cancer and arsenic needs a lot more looking into. We've suspected for a while that arsenic is doing more damage than anyone's letting on in this area. Obviously, the government is the only organization with the money and the expertise to carry out such a study. Rather than burying information such as 'The Arsenic Papers' it should be using them as a starting point. And they should start soon.

Note: The existence of 'The Arsenic Papers' was made known to me by Dr. Morton Shulman, columnist for the Toronto Sun. The book can be obtained either through its publisher, The Highway Bookshop, Cobalt, Ontario, P0J 1C0, or locally through Romany Rye Gifts and Books, Marmora, K0K 2M0, (413) 472-2798.

ONE FOOT IN THE FURROW

BY BOB TROTTER

It may be too late for this year but it is an idea to keep in mind for next summer: a farm vacation.

For more than a dozen years, a small group of farmers has been promoting the idea that a great many urbanites have a yen to get back to the land; that thousands of city-dwellers have roots in the country. With this in mind, they have formed a farm vacation association.

In Ontario, for instance, 28 farmers and their families offer an alternative holiday experience, a farm vacation. Most of the farms involved are working farms.

Prince Edward Island farmers have a similar organization.

"Guests are welcome to help with farm chores, if they want to," says Sharon van Son, who works for the agricultural manpower branch of the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food. "But a farm vacation is not a working holiday. You can do as little or as much you like. What makes it interesting is that families are welcomed - encouraged, even - to participate in the farm vacation plan."

Most of the farms offer accommodation in the farm house but some have separate accommodation for guests. Some farm vacations, then, offer the luxury of a resort while others simply offer family-style, country living.

We live in the country with our horse barn in the backyard. We feel a part of the country. The smell of new-mown hay can be enjoyed almost daily in June, early July, late August and early September when second cuts are coming off the fields. We have a chicken stable a few hundred yards away and thrill to the sound of a cock crowing in the mornings and even the contented, sometimes frantic sounds of the hens.

Across the road is a beef feedlot - two, in fact - so that the sounds and odors of the country are a part of everything we see, hear, feel and smell.

It is amazing, though, how so few city people can appreciate these things. The other day, a few children were being interviewed on Radio Noon after they had been on a farm tour near Toronto. A couple of them indicated they wouldn't want to go into a barn again because they didn't like the smells. Man, that's what I love about the country. Those smells don't bother me a bit.

I'm sure there are a great many people who would love to awaken to these sounds and smells. A hundred years ago, more than 70 per cent of this country's population were associated either directly or indirectly with agriculture. Nowadays, only about six per cent of the population is actively engaged in farming. It is a great and glorious way of life and, without some knowledge of farms and farming, nobody's education is complete.

I hope this idea of farm vacations can be expanded.

What this country lacks is understanding: understanding of one another, of different backgrounds, cultures, languages, ways of life. Farm vacations can do many things for the participants. A farm vacation can be rewarding, fun, interesting, educational, healthful and relaxing. But a farm vacation can surely do a lot to promote understanding between ruralites and urbanites.

For the farm family, hosting a vacationing family can be hard but rewarding work. It offers the opportunity to share experiences and meet people from many walks of life.

Participating farmers range from beef and dairy to cash crop and mixed farms.

It may be too late for this year. Most vacation plans have already been made. If you are interested, write to the Ontario Vacation Farm Association, R.R. 2, Erin, Ont., N0B 1T0.

Eastern Ontario Steam Show

A look at the madness of the past;
they might be the machines of the future

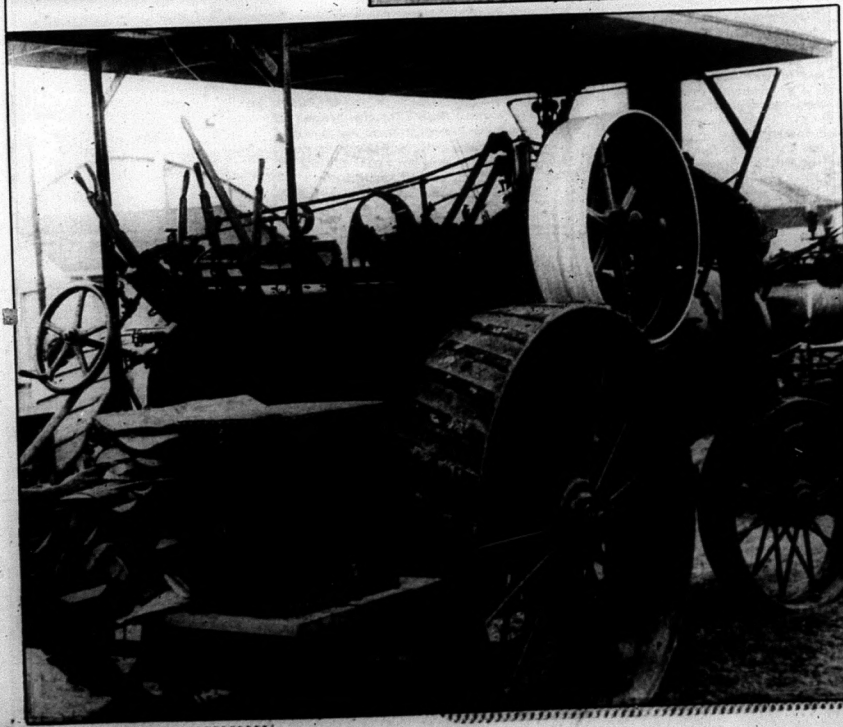

BY JOHN BENNETT

The era of steam may have ended with the onset of cheap oil but if the many men and women who organized and participated in this year's Eastern Ontario Steam Show have their way it would be back tomorrow. The sixteenth annual steam show ran August 1-4 at the Campbellford Fairgrounds and for four days the smell of wood smoke and the sound of hissing steam filled the area around Campbellford.

"We've got about ten of the finest restored steam engines around on display here," said Ed Little, President of the Eastern Ontario Steam Show who fell in love with old engines, both steam and gasoline, back when he was a boy working for Harold Fry. "The Frys thrashed in this area for three generations. I used to fetch water and wood for Harold who used a steam engine years ago."

Mr. Little is now 67, a builder and stone mason who is 'trying to retire'. He has 38 antique engines of his own, all of them gas-powered and all but one are fully restored and operating. "If only the youngsters coming out of school worked as well as those engines we'd have no reason to worry about Canada," said Mr. Little sitting on the steps of the steam show's headquarters. A small log building that Mr. Little built which was raffled off by the Steam Show last Monday.

The steam show is largely to display the engines to a public that has long forgotten the power of steam to power vehicles and equipment. It also gives the enthusiasts and old timers a chance to get together and discuss their problems and locate scarce parts. One surprising thing though is the number of young people involved with steam. "These machines, many of them at least, have been passed down from grandfather to father to grandson and the kids are carrying on," said Mr. Little.

The only competition of the show was designed to give the owners of traction engines the chance to show how long it would take them to tow a thrashing machine into place, hookup the power belt and begin thrashing. The winner took two minutes while the loser six minutes.

In addition to the steam engines on display there were at least 20 antique tractors and 91 antique gasoline engines ranging in size from one to six horsepower. Some of the gas engines were operating antique equipment grinding grain, rolling oats or taking the corn off the cob. All the equipment at the show was operating.

According to Mr. Little the show, which was the work of 200 people, was a great success drawing close to 7,000 people over the four days. "I'd like you to mention the great job that Bob Michaels and his wife did to get this thing together and also the kindness of the Campbellford Public Utilities Commission which has been very good to us," said Mr. Little.

Some of the exhibitors I spoke to can see the steam engine making a comeback in the future and Mr. Little agrees. "With the cost of oil going up the way it is, if steam isn't used more in the future it should be." Maybe he's right. The hissing of steam just could be part of the answer to the oil problems facing this country.

EDITOR'S VIEWPOINT

BY JEANNETTE MOORE

Dealing with acid rain

I am one to rejoice about my good fortune in being able to spend days a week in this resort country, and I am also prone to urging others to appreciate this good life to the full. But, much as we might like to divorce ourselves from the polluted airs of the cities and breathe our comparatively pure atmosphere, any person who faces reality knows that even miles from a large city, the air is just that - comparatively clean. And we must all share responsibility for the pollution which has been created to supply all of us with the amenities of modern living. It is only fair (for humans, not for the wildlife) that the winds bring the deadly residue of industry to the country for us to suffer the consequence of our industrialized life.

Knowing the fate of so many lakes in Ontario to date because of acid rain - fish and other aquatic life killed off in close to 200 Ontario lakes - much as we would rather not think about it, good sense requires that we heed the warnings of those concerned about this very present danger.

One such warning was voiced in a speech made over radio earlier this month by Peterborough M.P. Bill Domm. He noted the difficulty in making Canadians aware of the danger because "acid rain is not something that is easily seen and its effects occur gradually, over a period of years, so some people see no need for urgency in finding a solution. There are some who would say economic problems have priority over environmental ones." But, as he pointed out, acid rain also involves the economy, for Canada and for this area where Tourism, as the major industry, would be seriously affected should the corrosive rainfall of sulfuric and nitric acids coming from the smoke stacks of industry, reach the same level here as in many other parts of Ontario.

Already, Mr. Domm said, according to one recent study, some lakes in the Haliburton-Muskoka area have lost from 40 to 75 per cent of their acid neutralizing ability in the last 10 years.

Let us listen further to what Mr. Domm had to say. "After a number of showers with this rain, a lake's PH level can fall low enough to impair the egg producing ability of fish. The end result is that a lake will appear very nice to look at, with clean blue water. The unfortunate fact is that it will also be virtually lifeless....Aquatic life is not the only thing threatened by acid rain, because soil in much of Eastern Canada is susceptible to chemical change due to acidic rainfall. This fact holds tremendous implications for Canada's forest industry which injects billions of dollars into the Canadian economy annually...."

"Things are expected to get worse instead of better if the American government goes ahead with a plant to convert 80 oil-fired electrical generating plants from oil to less expensive and more readily abundant coal. Although this move might make sense from an economic standpoint, the environmental implications are great because coal causes more pollution."

"There is no doubt the solution to the acid rain problem is going to be a very costly one. An estimate tabled in the House of Commons last fall by then Environment Minister John Fraser put the cost at $350 to $500 million annually for the rest of the century just to cut sulphur dioxide emissions in Eastern Canada in half. Similar estimates for the Eastern U.S. run to $7 billion annually."

We must agree fully with Mr. Domm's in his closing statement. "It will be my job as a politician and yours as a citizen to see that this work of overcoming the acid rain menace is expanded. With our lakes and rivers and perhaps even our forests, at stake, there can be no greater priority than finding a solution to the acid rain problem."

NOEL'S NOTES

BY NOEL STOCKTON

There's a story I want to tell you but for the life of me I don't quite know how I'm going to do it.

The trouble is that there's only one possible punch line to this affair and that happens to include a four letter word that I wouldn't be allowed to use in this hallowed press, but without which the whole tale would be totally incomplete.

Mind you, the word is becoming increasingly popular these days, not only in print but even on the idiot tube and seems to be acceptable to the intelligencia and the cognoscenti in movies and best sellers and other cultural forms of intrinsic expression.

We were in the Western Desert, in Libya, at the time, on the outskirts of Tobrukh and we were, in fact, in full retreat on our way to El Alemein, the main idea being, at the time, to get there before Rommel did and thereby offer some sort of resistance to his play of occupying the whole of the Nile Delta including Cairo, Alexandria, the Pyramids and the Golf Club at Gazeta.

On this particular day we had orders to rendezvous with the Regimental Headquarters on the perimeter of Tobrukh, right where we were standing at this moment, but unknown to the C.O. and myself the entire bloody army had already gone on ahead in jig time in view of the impending arrival of the Afrika Korps.

This disturbing news had been relayed to the HQ staff who had acted upon it forthwith and they had split the scene with a commendable dexterity, overlooking in their haste the wisdom of informing the rest of us that they had chosen such a precipitous action.

So here we stood: And in fact the enemy was already upon us as evidenced by the swirling dust storm that was advancing towards us in the wake of a mass of ugly, black Tiger tanks, manned by a brigade of coal-scute helmeted personnel with an evil intent upon our persons, and a questionable smirk upon their countenances.

Now the stumbling block in the path of our disorderly retreat was nothing more than the sheer, unabridged stubbornness of our colonel, a British officer of the old school, to whom the Hun was a pestilence and one that should be ignored rather than recognized.

He was one of those superior, over-bred, aloof gents commonly referred to as the British Aristocracy, and he exuded at all times a sort of high-bred aura that gushed from him like a misty squirt from a can of Lysol spray.

He was always immaculate, even in the midst of battle, where he would stride through the affray with boots polished like mirrors, his belt shining and his whiskers sparkling in the sunlight, and there was no way that you or I or the War Department could ever persuade him to appear in public, not even before the enemy, unshaven or even in battledress without his Sam Browne.

His use of the English language was spotless and never a dishonest word, or a tarnished one, was ever permitted to pass through his terse lips.

And right at this moment he was perched precariously on the hood of his jeep, gazing thoughtfully through his powerful field glasses, carefully studying the approaching dust storm, which the rest of us could identify, with our naked eyes, as eager representatives of the opposing team.

And I was urging him with some impatience to step down from his lofty perch, step up inside it and let us remove ourselves from the impending slaughter with some alacrity.

But he stood on, surveying the approaching disaster with a detached, highbrow ardour that in no way endeared itself to us, aware as we were that the enemy was at that very moment poised and ready to pounce upon us, bristling with tons of steel and explosive and an inherent distaste and distrust for our persons and our presence.

So once again I begged him to re-consider his attitude towards the Hun and let's get the hell out of there before the blow should descend upon us with a devastating fury.

Just one moment, he drawled in that highly educated timbre of his, we were told to meet the rest of the gang here, he said, so we can't very well disobey orders, now can we?

Yes sir, we can, said I with some feeling. The boys - meanwhile were hurling hateful glances in my direction and were obviously toying with the notion of taking matters into their own hands, not being of the same stubborn nature of the Colonel himself.

To them the Hun was no more than a nasty Panzer Division rapidly proceeding in their direction, and they seemed to want no part of it.

And neither did I, for that matter.

By now that relentless dust cloud had begun to take human shape and had physically blossomed forth in the form of a plainly discernible gallery of German tanks, all forging ahead towards us without thought of the consequences and at a rate of speed that would be considered dangerous on a dual highway.

And still the Colonel was balancing squarely atop the jeep, peering unblinkingly through his thick binoculars, when a blind man, wearing two pairs of dark sunglasses on both eyes in the middle of the blackest night could have noted, without a shadow of a doubt, the very nature of the fate that was so swiftly descending upon us.

At this point we were almost lost to each other in the swirling midst of the dust that was now beginning to encompass us all, and then the colonel looked down at me, and there was this cute little twinkle in his right eye.

I do believe you're right, he says slowly and without haste, but with some deliberation, returning his eyes to the peepholes in his glasses.

Yes, said he, there isn't too much doubt about it by gad, it's the Hun! quoth he.

Of course it is, I virtually screamed at him, that's what I've been trying to tell you all day. Why don't we get the hell out of here while we still can?

Then he looked down at me again, very disapprovingly.

There's no need to use bad language Noel, he said.

Now in moments of extreme stress I must admit to a sort of loosening of the bowels, a rather distressing circumstance that has caused me no little embarrassment on other occasions when I have come in contact with an angry enemy, and this was no exception.

At this moment the symptoms began to manifest themselves somewhat loosely.

I noticed, too, a rather significant attitude on the part of the men who were standing around, noticeably crossing and uncrossing their legs and generally giving the impression of a deep concern.

And the Colonel stood on, all the time keeping those wretched glasses trained on the advancing hordes, although by this time you could almost reach out and shake hands with them and grasp them by the whites of their eyes.

Very strange indeed, intoned the Colonel in a perplexed voice. I just can't understand, says he with a shake of his head, whatever could have happened to the HQ staff.

I can, said I, they either slunk off in the right direction a few hours ago or they were snapped up by this lot like we're going to be if we don't begin to use what brains the Good Lord saw fit to bestow upon us with our kit and get the hell and gone out of this rat trap before the whole bloody Afrika Korps descends around our scraggy necks and we all become heroes and statistics at the same time.

I'm surprised at you Noel, says he calmly, that kind of invective is hardly becoming in a man of your linguistic aptitude.

Nevertheless, said he, with a distant air, engaging his eye on the first of those steel monsters now emerging from the fog, I think, said he dreamily, carefully folding the leather straps on his binoculars and fiddling around in an impoverished effort to fit the instrument into the case around his neck, perhaps, said he, as he paused to fasten the buckle on the leather case that now contained the field glasses all carefully packed away snug and tidy in their appointed place, maybe, said he slowly and thoughtfully, clambering down to the sandy desert from the hood of the jeep as the first of the big guns almost poked him in the fourth rib, I do believe, says he as he stayed to brush a series of imaginary crumbs from his immaculate uniform, I think perhaps you're right, he said to me as he carefully placed one glassy boot inside the passenger area of the jeep, and therefore, says he with a sickeningly painful semi-smile as though he were suddenly reaching a momentous and troublesome decision, there seems to be no doubt old boy, says he, that this is where discretion becomes the better part of valour.

THE MARKET CLOCK

Retained as part of the new Peterborough Square, the Market Clock was a part of the Market Building opened by Mayor Stevenson in September 1889. Still enclosed in a leaden box inside the building's corner stone beneath the clock at the corner of George and Charlotte Streets is a collection of then contemporary photos, literature, documents and coins. Some of these coins were from the 'old Market Building built 38 years earlier. All of these items were carefully picked in paraffin paper or, in the case of important papers, in wax sealed jars. The Clock, long a Peterborough landmark, will remain with us for many more years.

CITY OF PETERBOROUGH

The town site of Peterborough, then known as Scott's Plains, was first settled in 1819 by Adam Scott. His daughter Jeanette was the first child to be born here and his wife was the first citizen to die here.

By 1827, the name had been changed to Peterborough with reasonable communications established to Coburg by a ferry across Rice Lake and an improved road from there to Peterborough. Twenty buildings including a general store, tavern, shoemaker's shop and cooperage were established. A saw and grist mill was in full operation as was a school. The settlement had a doctor, an Anglican clergyman and a Catholic priest.

In 1850, Peterborough became a Town and Thomas Benson was chosen to be mayor and reeve. This dual position permitted him to be a member of the County Council as Peterborough remained part of the County. A very different town, as much industry had been attracted here through the years, became a City in 1905. Although he opposed this change of status, Henry Best became the City's first mayor. The City's story is full of great people, grand events and most of all, civic pride.

FACTS

The Robust Reds
Just like the popular white wines, the robust reds can range in taste from bone dry to mellow. Which ones you'll like best depends on you and what's on the menu.

The driest of our red table wines are the new, Mendocino Burgundy and our fine varietal, Cabernet Savignon. They go best with the heavier red meats such as beef and lamb and they are best when served at about room temperature.
Cribari's Zinfandel is a dry varietal table wine and our Mountain Burgundy is almost as dry. Our Chianti is lighter in body and not quite as dry. All three go well with turkey, veal, duck and wild game.

Best with the hearty main courses, like lasagna and spaghetti with their rich red sauces are our Vino Rosso and Mello Burgundy.
They are the least dry of the red table wines we make.
Today, many people are enjoying red wines slightly chilled. That's perfectly OK for the lighter and less dry red wines, but not as good to serve the more robust red wines chilled. For them, it's best to take them out of the ice box for 30 minutes before serving.

BY RON REID

The story of Ontario's streams is not a happy one. Barely a century ago, we had Atlantic salmon rearing up the Don and other rivers along Lake Ontario; now the salmon are long since extinct. Brook trout still find waters cool and clean enough for their survival in stretches along the Niagara Escarpment, the Oak Ridges moraine and scattered across the north; but losses of trout streams to over-grazing, drainage ditches, and urban blight continue to mount.

But the pendulum is perhaps starting to swing back towards a recognition of the value of an unpolluted river. The Ontario Government has launched an ambitious program to restore degraded fisheries. More importantly, citizens themselves have begun banding together as volunteers to improve their environment in a practical way by helping streams back to life.

This effort is spearheaded by a group called Save Our Streams, under the direction of Sheelagh Walmsley. The idea is a simple one - extend the ancient concept

Study will determine effect of pesticide on aquatic life

The effects of pesticides on aquatic life in a lake are being studied by a group of researchers at the University of Guelph using an unusual study technique.

Large plastic sleeves called limnocorrals permit the researchers to isolate a section of lake water and examine what happens when controlled amounts of various materials are added to the water. The limnocorrals resemble an inflated rubber ring about five meters by five meters mounted on a wooden frame, and with plastic curtains that extend to the bottom of the lake where they are embedded in the mud.

The multi-disciplinary team of University of Guelph researchers are assessing the effect of pesticides on predator/prey (food species) balance using Lake St. George, a restricted area owned by the Metro Toronto and Region Conservation Authority.

They hope to develop a method for future evaluation of any pesticide that may find its way into a body of fresh water.

Some limnocorrals are left untreated as controls while others receive different concentrations of the pesticide under study. Test materials are applied with a special multi-orifice injector to ensure even distribution and to minimize disturbance of sediment.

Water samples permit the researchers to identify major groups of organisms present and to assess effects and recovery over a period of time, as well as the rate of disappearance of the material.

Professor Narinder Kaushik, an aquatic biologist, saw limnocorrals in use elsewhere for studying industrial pollutants in lakes, and adapted the technique for studies of pesticides. In this way, he explains, effects on the ecosystem can be studied without contaminating or endangering an entire lake.

The University of Guelph research team is examining a number of insecticides and herbicides used in agriculture and forestry at the Lake St. George location.

The stream savers

of the "river-keeper" by asking a group of volunteers to "adopt" a local stream. Through the adoption process, the groups meet with landowners, assess the problem areas such as erosion sites, clean up garbage, plant shrubs or grasses, or construct more substantial improvements such as deflectors.

Over the past three years, more than fifty Ontario groups have accepted the challenge of stream adoption. Boy Scouts, fly fishermen, naturalists and sportsmen all have participated, all the way from suburban Toronto to distant Fort Frances. Their achievements are impressive, not only in terms of miles of streams saved from further abuse, but also in showing that people care enough to work towards a cleaner environment. If you are interested in adopting a stream, details can be obtained from Save Our Streams, c/o F.O.N., 355 Leamill Road, Don Mills, Ontario, M3B 2W8.

Girl missing at rock concert

Debbie Marie Rushlow, age seventeen, of 249 Bridge St. West, Belleville, attended the Lingham Lake Lodge Rock Concert over the weekend and has been missing since 3 a.m. Sunday morning. A police dog was called in from Peterborough on Sunday to assist in an intensive search while a police helicopter was called in on Monday as the search continued.

The OPP detachment in Madoc was releasing only the information published in the first paragraph as of 9 a.m. Monday morning. The girl had not yet been found.

Field crop competition

The Madoc Agricultural Society, in conjunction with the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture, sponsored a field crop competition in cereal grain.

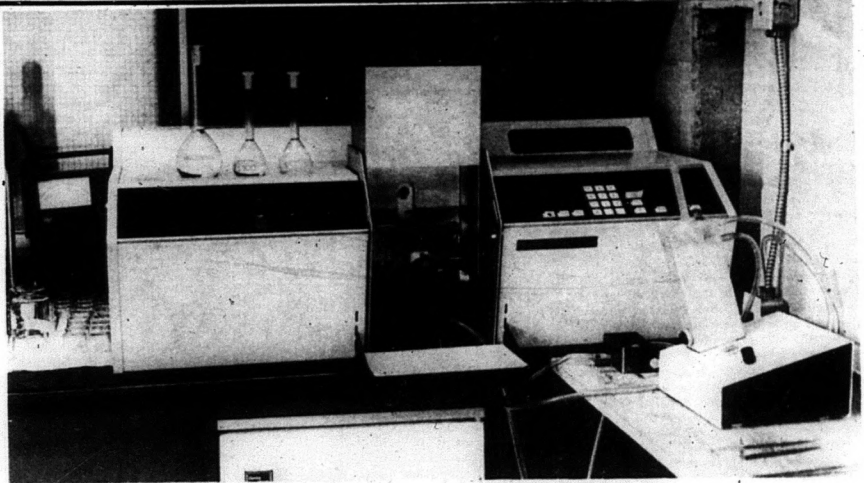

The crop was judged by Mr. Ken Thompson of Roslin and top scores were: Don McKinnon, 96 pts.; Sager Bros., 95 pts.; Fred Stein, 93 pts.; Allan Thompson, 92 pts.; Raeborn/Robinson, 92 pts.; David Foley, 91 pts.; Jerry Chapman, 90 pts.; Harold Harris, 89 pts.; George Robinson, 88 pts.; Richard Chapman, 86 pts.; Ken Holland, 86 pts.

The remaining competitors received a score ranging from 84 down to 72.

Guessing contest winner

The winner of the Peace Park "guess the white beans in a jar" contest at the Tweed-'80 Festival was Charlene Tebo, Tweed, Ontario. The actual count of the beans in the jar was 1,304 and Charlene guessed 1,310.

Over 100 visitors entered the contest coming from as far east as Granby, Quebec, and as far west as Dundas, Ontario.

Machine aids in measurement

What you see before you is an atomic absorption spectrophotometer and it's the Ministry of the Environment's latest gadget for measuring arsenic levels in the Moira River system.

This machine - which, according to Robert Empey of the ministry's Marmora plant, has undoubtedly made measuring of arsenic levels faster and more accurate - measures the amount of light absorbed by the arsenic compounds when they are burned as a gas [the water samples taken are first put through a vapouriser]. "It's a very sensitive machine and detects small differences," Mr. Empey said, The atomic absorption spectropho-meter has not only increased accuracy and speeded up the process, it's also allowed the ministry to take more samples; before the machine was acquired samples had to be sent to Toronto to be processed.

Mr. Empey said that the basic model you see here cost about $14,000 and came from Australia.

Water meters going into use, ratepayers should read by-law

On October 1st, 1981, by-law number 997, being a by-law to enact rules and regulations respecting the Village of Madoc municipal waterworks system, goes into effect and those water meters everyone has been wondering and worrying about will begin to do their jobs, which is to monitor the amount of water you use and charge you accordingly. That's the user-pay system that the Madoc Village Council has adopted and which they feel is the only really fair way to establish a system of charging for water used in the village.

This new program has been a controversial one and, at different points in its implementation, has come under a great deal of criticism. However, it is a tried and proven method and, as council indicated, it is the fairest method possible for the village to charge for its services. The system has been adopted from a similar program in Tweed, although our system will probably leave us in better shape because Tweed converted to water meters on their existing system while ours incorporates the replacement of the main water and sewer system into the program which means that, when the program is completed, we'll have a brand new system that should cut down on the number of service interruptions and that will see those who use the most water paying for that use.

Also, while it may seem to many consumers that the program is costing an unduly high rate now, we will be able to complete the program without going into debt (above and beyond the initial debenturing) and prolonging the agony or forcing excessive raises in rates, as the project progresses. We essentially will be paying as we go, doing only what we can afford.

At a public meeting held in January, council predicted that the rates would increase by approximately $10.00 per month and that is exactly what is happening. When it was explained at the public meeting, the raise in rates seemed to meet with the approval of the majority of

Minutemen win Bancroft Tournament, split games in Grafton Tournament

Sixteen teams were entered in the Bancroft tournament last weekend. Shortly after the sun set on Sunday night the Madoc Minutemen were awarded the "A" trophy as tournament champions and one Minutemen player was awarded the "Most Valuable Player" trophy.

On Friday night it only took five innings to dispose of the Bancroft Sports Centre 6-1 (five runs after five innings mercy rule). Saturday in another five inning game the Minutemen eliminated the Bancroft Legion 10-0. Sunday afternoon, Trent River fell victim to the Minutemen's excellent pitching and hot bats 9-3, in the semi-finals. This opened the door to the finals against Etobicoke Strates Restaurant on Sunday night. Enroute to the finals the Etobicoke team had eliminated Harcourt, Durham and another Toronto entry.

Brian Armstrong's two-run homer in the first inning (he was intentionally walked the next two times at bat) gave the Minutemen an early 2-0 lead. Strates Restaurant scored once in the second inning and this was as close as they were to come. The Minutemen added three runs in the fourth and a pair of runs in the sixth before giving up a pair of runs in the seventh to win the championship 7-3. Everyone played well. The team batted .333 for the tournament. Clayton White-man led the offensive attack batting .500, scored eight runs and batted in nine runs. Brian Armstrong also hit well during the tournament, batting .500, scoring two runs and drove in six runs. Harley Willemssen also batted .500; scored one run and had 2 RBIs. Dave Fleming batted .461, scored 7 runs; Charlie Wannamaker batted .308, scored 6 runs; Al Reid batted .333, scored 3 runs; Robert Nickle had 3 RBIs and Glen Graham and Wayne Willemssen each had 2 RBIs. The above players played well defensively as well and were supported defensively by Harold Bailey, Lynn Hagerman, Eric Bailey and Terry Helps.

The "Most Valuable Player" was Brian Armstrong. Brian pitched all four victories and in 24 innings, gave up 7 runs (only 4 earned), 17 hits, walked 4 and struck out 17. His earned run average was 1.17 per seven inning game. This was probably Brian's finest weekend of softball. We are happy he was chosen the "Most Valuable Player" in the tournament and the fellows are also happy their bats "finally" gave Brian the support his pitching deserves.

Next - the playoffs - whom? when? We are not sure. Probably, Hoards' starting next week, but then again...

The Madoc Minutemen won one and lost one during the Grafton Softball Tournament. They met Willowdale at 9 a.m., Saturday (July 26) and the one-hit, four-run shutout by Steven Johnston led the local squad to a 4-0 victory. Charlie Wannamaker's two hits and two runs and Dave Fleming's 2 RBIs single led the Minutemen's attack.

Saturday's 6 p.m. start against Cobourg Hilliers was rained out and rescheduled for 8 a.m. Sunday (nobody should have to play ball at 8 a.m. on Sunday). Grafton is a quiet little village at 8 a.m. on Sunday and so were the Minutemen's bats. When 9:15 rolled around the Minutemen woke up to the fact that they were shutout 3-0 on the one hit performance by Pete Harrison on the Hillier mound.

Brian Armstrong pitched well. He stranded two runners in both the first and second innings; gave up one run and left the bases loaded in the third inning before surrendering two runs in the fourth. Hilliers collected five hits and three walks in earning the victory.

MP calls for investigation into penal system

Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington M.P. Bill Vankoughnet has appealed to the Solicitor General for the immediate establishment of an allparty task force to initiate an immediate investigation of penitentiaries in Eastern Canada.

Mr. Vankoughnet, together with Cumberland Colchester M.P. Robert Coates want Solicitor General Robert Kaplan to convene the task force because of what they view as "an escalation in escapes, hostage takings and parole violations. The joint letter to the solicitor general was sent within days of the Millhaven hostage incident of last week, but a government source in Ottawa says the M.P.s had planned their request before the July 29 incident.

Bob Coates wrote the solicitor general about what he and Mr. Vankoughnet believe are "Coverups" in Canada's penal system.

"Bill Vankoughnet, M.P., and I have become increasingly concerned over penitentiary operations in Eastern Canada.
In the area of escapes, hostage takings and parole violations, there is an immediate need for action to stop what appears to be an escalation in security gaps in institutional operations," he wrote.

"Still further we have learned of cover ups in the operations of penitentiaries.
There have been attempts to prevent public disclosure of the failures in security that have resulted in a significant increase of the safe operations of the institutions in Eastern Canada," he added.

Coates continued to say that the M.P.s were aware of "interference" from Ottawa and regional centres in the everyday operations of federal institutions.

"When escapes and hostage takings occur there have been examples, where your officials have undermined the authority of those given the responsibility for the day to day operations of the institutions in question. There have also been public statements from your officials not involved in day to day operations that reflect upon the work of those who are involved in such operations. This has caused a significant erosion among your employees within the institutions," he charged.

When referring to occurrences in prisons in his constituency, Mr. Vankoughnet did not delve into the recent Millhaven incident. He said that his riding had several federal institutions within its bounds, and that matters concerning them
"weigh heavily on the minds of my constituents."

"The events surrounding last spring's escape of James Oag, from Collins Bay, the attack upon a Queen's University psychology student who was to interview a prisoner at an area detention centre, and this week's hostage taking incident at Millhaven, have all conspired to raise the normal fears of my constituents to an unacceptable level. This situation is also a matter of concern to employees of those institutions," he wrote.

Mr. Coates says all due speed is required for this task force.

"Because of the present atmosphere within penal institutions operated in Eastern Canada, we believe there should be an immediate move to establish a task force. Said task force should have representation from all three political people and council convinced those in attendance that this system would be in their best interest.

As we said, the by-law goes into effect on October 1st and, if you are not familiar with this by-law, the village has placed the by-law in full in this newspaper for your convenience and they recommend that you read it carefully in its entirety. The original by-law (No. 997) was passed in May of 1978 but an additional by-law (No. 1057) is just now in the process of being passed. It will be given its final reading at the next council meeting and again, council recommends that you read it carefully and, if you have any questions or don't understand any part of either by-law, Village Clerk-Treasurer Doug Parks will be happy to assist you or answer any of your questions.

It appears that there could be some initial confusion regarding the billing but, once the system is established, the consumer should be able to monitor their particular usage. And, indeed, control any overage charges. Since the billing goes into effect in October and billing is done at the beginning of each month, consumers will pay a flat rate for October and November.
In December, their bill will contain the flat rate plus any overage charges for October and November. This will continue to be the rule. Every third month, you will receive the overage charges for the previous two months.

You are now likely wondering how the overage charge is arrived at and how you can regulate your overage? As you can see by the chart in by-law number 1057, the minimum charge for the 5/8" or 5/8" x 3/4" metre, the standard residential metre size, is $22.00 for twelve cubic metres of water, which is the maximum allowable usage without incurring overage charges.
One cubic metre converts to 220 gallons of water so, for $22.00, the average person can use up to 2,640 gallons of water without paying an overage charge. If you use less than that amount, you will continue to pay the flat rate of $22.00. For example, if you used 21 cubic metres of water in one month, your bill for the month would be $22.00 for the flat rate plus $3.15 for overage or $25.15 total. The overage charge is arrived at by multiplying 9 cubic metres by .35 cents.

To regulate your overage, all you have to establish is when your meter is read and what the total on your meter was at that time. Your next reading will be done at that same time during the next month and, by checking the reading on your meters periodically, you can determine if you are over or under the allowable maximum usage of 12 cubic metres. If you have reached 12 cubic metres before your monthly reading is taken, you have used more than your allotted share of water and, unless you don't use any more water prior to the reading taking place, you will incur an overage charge.

The beauty of this program was illustrated by Tweed when they implemented the use of water meters. When the program was originally implemented there, only about 30 percent of the users were under the base rate. However, as time progressed, people tried to avoid the overage charges and now, 80 to 90 percent of the users are consistently under the base rate. This could be a significant breakthrough for Madoc if that trend also continues here. With only one well presently fit for prolonged human consumption (?), conservation of the water we do have is essential, especially during the summer months. The water meters should eventually decrease the demand on the present well until such time as a new backup well is found.

The base rate of $22.00 per month is for both water and sewer. Because this is a user-pay system, if you are only supplied with water, that is all you pay for in your monthly bill. In that case, your monthly bill would be $11.00 plus any overage you might incur.

Again, we must stress that you read the by-law and its amendments over carefully.
If you are unsure of any part of it, contact Mr. Parks or have yourself put on the agenda for the next council meeting and have the council itself explain your question. Council feels this by-law is a very good one but, if you detect a flaw or have a suggestion for a change or amendment, council would like to hear from you.

Hobson suggests plants

Dave Hobson, the Liberal Candidate for Hastings-Peterborough, has suggested that two fuel alcohol plants be built in the riding.

Hobson suggested that one plant could be located at Ivanhoe north of Belleville and could use municipal and industrial wastes and the other plant, near Havelock, could use farm wastes to produce alcohol fuel for farm vehicles in the two counties.

"Making fuel alcohol from wastes helps to solve two serious problems at the same time - energy and environment," said Hobson.

Hobson is confident that processes now exist to turn wastes into fuel and cited data he had gathered from a fuel from waste meeting for Eastern Ontario farmers held in Kempenville recently.

"Small scale stills now being used by farm co-ops in North Carolina were demonstrated at Kempenville, and there is no reason we can't do the same here," he said.

Fuel alcohol from wastes can be used as a ten percent blend with gasoline or as a straight alcohol fuel. Used as a blend called "gasohol", it is now sold at over $100 gas stations in the United States, providing extra income for farmers.

"One farmer near Pary Sound is producing fuel alcohol for his farm vehicles at 30 cents per gallon, which is less than half the cost of diesel fuel," said Hobson.

With recent increases in petroleum costs, Hobson feels now is the time to build plants to make fuel alcohol available as an alternative.

The latest Ontario Budget dropped the road tax on alcohol fuels amounting to 21 cents per gallon and also dropped the 7 percent sales tax on vehicles designed to use alcohol.

Hobson welcomes these two incentives and feels they should help to lead the move to alcohol fuels.

A neophyte's look at the world of journalism

BY LORI MAYNES

The written word has always held a certain fascination for me. The very idea of seeing your work in print conjures up visions of grandeur for the would-be journalist or best selling author in all of us. It must be one of the ultimate challenges for the writer who has to rely on his command of the written language, his style, to communicate an idea. The story is there in black and white with no help of the sensationalism of television journalism to hold the audience's attention -- it has to make it one its own.

The newspaper business has always been identified as being a somewhat glamorous occupation: the freedom of the press; the power of the written speech; the Woodward and Goldstein combination with every story a potential Watergate. Even those who never pick up a newspaper receive the impression through television and movies that the journalist's world is exciting, involving the kind of investigative reporting that takes place on "Lou Grant" every week. Yet never much thought is given to the story behind the newspaper, what actually happens to the news from the time it's made to the time it reaches you.

I must admit, my sentiments about newsprint were not unlike everyone else. Sure, it was great for lining bird cages, wrapping up fish and making paper hats. It even made a great weapon for swatting flies when it was rolled up. But my selfish days of careless disregard for the newspaper are over. No more will I let it be added as fuel for the fire -- not after my newsroom experience of the past two weeks, babysitting the local paper from the time it was conceived until the time we put it to be.

To be thrust in the midst of the production process of Cembal Publications was almost staggering on this, my first day in the centre of operations for five area newspapers located in the main office in Marmora. The assembly process begins Monday mornings at 8 o'clock. It is here that the news to appear in the Marmora Herald, Madoc Review, Havelock Citizen, Hastings Star and Norwood Register are gathered and it is here that the editors of these papers create their weekly.

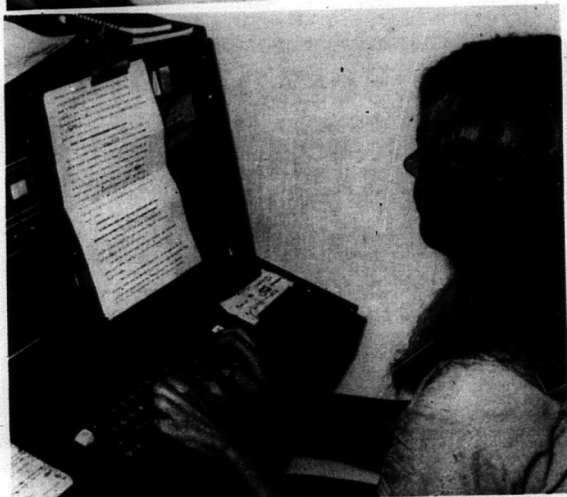

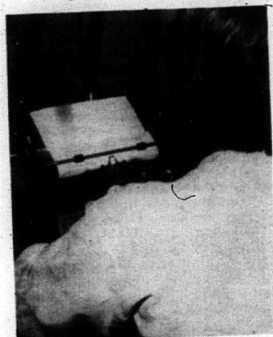

I was immediately introduced to the technical aspect of the news as the news columns began rolling out of the darkroom to be proofread. The typesetting machines were producing the printed columns through a photographic principle. As the words were entered on a keyboard, they were filmed and the image recorded in a film box. This was then run through a processor and the result -- articles lined up in the column form that appears in the newspaper.

The real development in typesetting over the years has been photography. The old typesetters required that each letter be placed on the press and the lines printed one at a time. It's little wonder that the newspapers of old contained very little news with the time involved in the set-up. The machines presently in use in the Herald office give the local papers the same potential of papers even in the major cities. Through changing technology, the typesetters are becoming both more sophisticated and less expensive. Some models even have the capacity to store and recall every entry on a screen, a process which enables the editor to correct the copy only once and eliminate the chance for error, a process which also means I could be out of a job! With the machine practically doing a mind of its own, proof-readers will soon become a vanishing breed.

Another intricate piece of machinery used in the production of the paper is an overhead process machine which gives enlargements or reductions or photographs and ads on what are termed PMT's. The

The paper goes through a number of processes before it hits the street. From typewriter (top) to typesetter and from camera through darkroom to process camera (left) from the ad make-up (above) it all goes to the layout sheets (right). From there it goes back to the big camera where it is shot on negative sheets and shipped to Quinte Web in Tweed where it is printed.

Denture therapy

An alternate to traditional dental care

BY JOHN BENNETT

One of the newest services in this area is being offered by James Moore. He is a denture therapist. Although I still have all of my teeth except for the one I lost trying to take a bite out of a hockey stick on new year's day, 1960, I paid Mr. Moore a visit last week to see just what he has to offer the public. Before I left, I had learned a great deal not only about what a denture therapist does but also about what they could do and some of their history.

Jim Moore is 32 years old, single and a recent graduate of Sir George Brown College in Toronto where he spent the last three years learning the art of making dentures. He is one of only thirteen graduates in all of Ontario. To get into the course he had to pass two manual dexterity tests, spend a year at Loyalist College in Belleville to upgrade his qualifications and then be one of only 45 students out of 300 applicants chosen by the college.

"Well, I have a partial plate. I guess that's how I got interested in the field, but more important was that I had left school early and then found that I didn't like the way my life was going. So over a period of several years, I decided to do something about it," said Mr. Moore.

Denture Therapists quite simply make false teeth for those of us who have lost our natural teeth. They do not, however, work through a dentist. They offer their services directly to the public, something which up until 1974 was illegal. Prior to then the dentists controlled all dental work in Ontario. However, in the late sixties many men and women who were trained to work in dental labs making teeth decided they could use their knowledge of denture-making to provide cheaper dentures, well better service.

trate on the denture. I made two complete dentures before Christmas, my first year."

So much for the politics. How do you go about making false teeth?

"It takes five visits to a therapist to have a set of dentures made. I don't actually make the teeth. I make the denture by taking a mould or cast of the patient's mouth. Then I make up a rough denture from the mould which I use as the basis for making the final wax mould. Then once I get the mould the way I want it, I use the loss of wax technique to produce the final acrylic denture. The loss of wax technique dates back to the Aztecs of Mexico who were using it before the Spanish conquered them," said Mr. Moore.

The teeth, says Mr. Moore, are inserted into the denture and this is where the artistry of his craft comes in. He must choose the right number, size and colour of teeth to try and best suit the patient's mouth and appearance. He showed me hundreds of different teeth in seven shades. "These teeth, like all the teeth I use, come from Pennsylvania and are of the highest quality. I want to use only the best for my patients."

"So what's the advantage of me going to you over a dentist?" I asked Mr. Moore.

"First of all, cost. I am charging about 30-40 percent less than a dentist but more importantly, service and fit. Unlike the lab who makes a denture for a dentist I am working directly with the patient I can talk to him or her and also see the person. That gives me a much better idea of what they want. Also, I am available for service to ensure that your dentures fit. I'll make alterations until the patient is happy."

Mr. Moore also told me a story about a man who came to see him unannounced about 4 p.m. one Sunday afternoon. He had broken his dentures. "When would you like them?" asked Mr. Moore.

"I don't need them until 7 p.m. That's when we have supper," the man replied.

"Well, he had his dentures back in time for supper. I don't know if I'll continue to be that open for service but sometimes people need their teeth fast, maybe they are going out or something where they just have to have them, and I hope to help them out when I can," Mr. Moore told me.

Mr. Moore also pointed out to me that he is the only denture therapist in the area, the nearest one being in Peterborough. This, he said, was not only a benefit to him but to his patients. "I plan to be available for evening appointments so people can come in after work for fittings. This will save them from losing pay taking time off to see a dentist and the cost of driving back and forth."

"Another part of the service I offer is privacy - that's one of the reasons I am located out of town. I schedule time between each appointment so that only one patient is here at a time. Dentures should look so natural that no one can tell they are dentures, so why embarrass people by making them walk around town without their teeth?" said Mr. Moore.

Talking to Mr. Moore I got the impression that he separates his appointments not only for his patients, but also to suit his own lifestyle. "I could be doing a lot more business in the city but I'd rather live in this area and if I am lucky enough to attract patients from as far as Rosemead and Havelock there should be enough business to keep it going."

Mr. Moore is located on Highway 45 just north of Hastings. His sign will be up in a few days but call first. He likes to protect the privacy of his other patients.

This action provoked the Dental Association and the Ontario government, through which the dentist controlled the industry, to undertake legal action against denturists in the early seventies. This often meant that the Ontario Provincial Police and the RCMP were seizing people's teeth as evidence. However, the denturists responded by lobbying (through their organization, the Denture Therapist Association) and by gaining public support by providing a needed service. This ultimately caused the government and the dentists to recognize the qualifications of dental therapists and legalize the services they provide.

The battle is still not over though. The therapists want the right to work on partial plates which is denied them now. Actually they expected to have the legislation changed to allow this by last fall. In anticipation of the change Mr. Moore and his fellow classmates at Sir George Brown received extensive training in partials during their three year course.

"I know that there have been difficulties between therapists and dentists in the past, but I hope we can get beyond that now. Actually, I hope that someday I can work in a clinic in association with a dentist," said Mr. Moore.

He also said that he feels his training in denture construction is far more extensive than the training a dentist receives. "In the four years of dental school they (dentists) make two sets of dentures while studying many other dental questions; we concen-

Local builder among number design

Recently, the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada (HUDAC) announced that they would be awarding contracts to fourteen Ontario homebuilders, on behalf of the Ministry of Energy, for the design of energy-efficient housing incorporating passive solar energy features. According to George Mills, the President of the HUDAC local Association, HUDAC's idea in awarding these contracts was to incorporate passive solar energy features in existing housing designs so that these new houses would blend in with the average house but which should be able to cut the cost of the energy requirements of the house while at the same time improving the standards for the construction of the everyday house. In this area, Maurice H. Rollins Construction Ltd. was one of the fourteen homebuilders selected to participate in the project and will build a split level house of approximately 1900 square feet in Brimley Court in Belleville.

In the first phase of the project, 51 builders from across the province submitted preliminary information for model home designs incorporating passive solar energy features. Fourteen of the 51 were chosen to proceed to phase two.

In phase two, after the project steering committee, consisting of representatives of HUDAC, the Ministries of Energy and Housing and Ontario Hydro, has thoroughly assessed the completed designs, grants will be awarded for the construction of some or all of the homes as demonstration projects across the province. The target date for awarding construction contracts is early in August and the model homes are expected to be completed by the end of the year.

Passive solar heating is space heating derived directly from solar energy, without assistance from fans, pumps or other mechanical collection devices. There are three basic types of passive solar systems: 1) direct gain, in which the majority of the windows face south for maximum exposure to the sun; 2) indirect gain, in which sunlight strikes a glass-covered wall and the wall conducts the heat into the building; 3) the attached space type, which consists of a greenhouse on the south side of a building to collect solar energy and pass it into the house through ducts. Wayne Storms, the designer and project head for the Rollins' home, chose a split level design for the project because these houses are generally more energy efficient than a bungalow or two storey dwelling. Upon completion, the demonstration houses will be available for sale to the public. The house will be available for house inspection by other builders and public and, whoever buys the house, is asked to allow the monitoring of the lighting and other affects of passive energy features.

We asked Mr. Storms how much additional passive solar energy features would cost and how long it would take homeowner to recover these costs. He said that the additional features would add to seven percent to the standard construction costs but felt that homeowner could save approximately the same amount. He said that the additional features would add to seven percent to the standard construction costs but felt that homeowner could save approximately 30 percent on current fuel prices. "added Mr. Storms, 'the comfort level in this house will be much greater than a normal house. You'll get more of the things, like sun, and less of the bad things like drafts.'"

George Mills also added that all passive solar energy features are being incorporated in the design and orientation of the house on the lot. The internal layout was redesigned to reduce the number openings in the north walls by organizing the plan so that major windows are located on the south walls. Some north windows are still required for cross ventilation and aesthetic appeal, thus eliminating the need for mechanical ventilation or air conditioning. Shading devices are designed to screen windows from the summer sun but to permit the capture of solar heat in the type windows and reflective solar control blinds were a few other energy saving devices incorporated in the design of the Rollin's home.

It is expected that the initial sod turning will take place in August and that the Rollin's house will be completed by November or December.

George Mills, the President of the local HUDAC Association, looks at the blueprint of the house to be built in Belleville this fall. The house is a split level and will be put up for sale when it is completed. Maurice H. Rollins Construction Ltd. designed and will build the house which incorporates passive solar energy features into the design.

Local men enjoy arctic Summer in

BY RUBY MCCOY

Five local men have a much better idea of what life is like in the Canadian Arctic following their recent four day visit to Frobisher Bay on Baffin Island.

The men, Francis Rothermel, Vaughan Glover, Eric Mantle, Dr. Robert Sharford and Glen Wentworth, left Marmora at 5 a.m. on Thursday, July 31, for Ottawa where they boarded a Nordair plane to Montreal and then to Frobisher Bay, which is 1280 air miles north of Montreal. They arrived in Frobisher Bay at 2 p.m. and were met by Mr. Rothermel's son Doug who has worked and lived in Frobisher Bay for about eight months and is presently working with the Maintenance Department of the Housing Association of Frobisher Bay. Doug acted as their guide for most of their stay.

Frobisher Bay is located on the southeast coast of Baffin Island near the eastern border of the Northwest Territories. It is a village of 2600 people (about 1650 of whom are Inuits and the other 950 whites). It is the largest community, and in fact the only community of over 1000 east of Yellowknife (2260 miles to the west). Therefore it is the centre of transportation, communications, radio, television, education, administration and economic development for Eastern Arctic.

Comparing it to our standards, it is a trash-littered town with many small one storey wooden homes called 512s because of their being 512 square feet in size. However there are quite a few better and larger homes occupied by people connected with government and private companies, etc. There are many apartment houses and homes being built every year along with sewage and water lines, so that eventually a few years will see an improvement in living conditions for all residents and will be a decent and clean community - that is, if you don't mind the cold weather and long winter nights. Even the Hudson Bay Company has a regular department store in the hotel-highrise complex and there is a large store being built close to the waterfront.

Since Frobisher Bay is situated above the tree line there is no vegetation growing except for a few beautiful wild flowers during the short summertime. The impression the Marmora visitors got was of rock, tundra, moss, ice and snow. During their visit the sun rose between 3:45 and 4 a.m. which is a very short night. The weather was sunny every day during their four day visit except for fog one morning. The maximum temperature was 16 degrees C.

Frobisher Bay became a town in the early 1940s when the United States Airforce installed an airstrip, later extending it for the town to become the logistic centre for the D.E.W. Line.

The Marmora men learned that the bay was frozen over one week before they arrived. An ice breaker had come in to break up the ice to allow the first supply of the year to "dock". The supply ship came in on the high tide and settled to the bed of the bay when the tide subsided - about 15 feet, leaving the ship high and dry to be unloaded onto trucks driving alongside of the ship. The unloading would take about ten days because it can only be done twice during a 24 hour period when the tide is out. The high tide brought big chunks of ice (icebergs of about eight feet on three sides) onto the banks of the bay.

Even though there is a 50 room hotel

there and relatively modern, the Marmora men all stayed in ("crowded in", Mr. Rothermel said) one of the 512s to acquire more of the Arctic feeling.

They toured the community thoroughly, driving a car at times and doing much walking. Some of the places visited were: a river where some fishing for Arctic char is done; the schools and the high school dormitory where non-resident school children are lodged; the Anglican, Roman Catholic and Pentecostal churches; the hotel-mall complex, government buildings; construction jobs; arts and craft stores where some of the products come from outlying settlements; the museum.

They also drove three miles to a small settlement named Apex which was the original site of Frobisher Bay and a Hudson Bay Company store; walked out to the supply ship mentioned before; attended a baseball game played by two girls' teams (Mr. Rothermel commented, "It was so cold we had to keep our hands in the pockets of our jackets") and saw some Inuits leave in their large motorized canoes for a fishing and hunting trip.

One of the party, Eric Mantle, attended

DELORO NEWS

Friends of Sister Mary Murphy may wish to send her a get well card when they learn she is scheduled for surgery on Monday morning at Hotel Dieu Hospital in Kingston.

Louise and Randy Smith have moved from Deloro to his father's home on Roscoe Street in Marmora. Pat Smith is in serious condition at Belleville General Hospital.

Bernice Murphy accompanied her brother and sister-in-law, Eugene and Margaret Harvie, and son Michael on a week's holiday to Mississauga, Streetsville, Bowmanville Zoo and the Lion Safari at Cambridge.

Sympathy of the community is extended to the families of the late Margaret Hall, who was a long time resident of Centre Hastings Nursing Home and the late Sid Sandham, who was a resident of Deloro for many years.

The young people employed at the Experience '80 group of Moira Conservation Authority spent four days in Deloro Village last week cleaning the park, cutting grass and brushing out.

Visiting Mrs. Edith Holmes at Centre Hastings Nursing Home last week were Orville and Jean Moncrief of Cavan, Edith Smith of Peterborough and Bob and Sue Waller, John and Jim of Saskatoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Bicknell and three children of Forrest and Mrs. Bicknell's mother, Mrs. Elfrede Serwann of West Germany were guests last week of Len and Eleanor Bicknell and family.

Tom and Dorothy Armstrong and their son David had a very unpleasant experience while on holidays recently at Port Elgin on Lake Huron. They had returned to their hard top tent trailer after visiting their friends, Sid and Joan Potter at Southampton and were asleep when, about 2 a.m., a car came crashing through a fence, across a field and ran into the Armstrongs' trailer. David was thrown into part of the canvas and was not injured; his mother came to some distance away and Tom was knocked unconscious. He received injuries about the eye and other abrasions and ended up spending four days in Southampton Hospital. Part of the trailer, which was demolished, ended up in a tree 10 feet away. The young man driving the car faces four charges.

Local farmers

win awards

Several area farmers won dairy herd improvement awards at the annual twilight meeting held at the Harry Danford farm in Springbrook in July.

George Robinson of R.R. 2, Marmora, took the prize for the top supervised herd in the county as well as the highest herd average; Ernest Thain and Son of R.R. 3, Stirling, had the highest producing cow and the highest producing heifer on supervised plan while Donald Martin and Sons of Tweed, had the highest producing cow on the owner's sampler plan.

In production increase Jack Donnan of R.R. 2, Stirling, and Kenneth Stiles, of R.R. 4, Marmora were third in the supervised category while Harold Harris of R.R. 2, Madoc, was first and Earl McFaul of R.R. 4, Marmora was second in the owner-sampler. Mr. Donnan was second to Mr. Robinson in the supervised herd average while Douglas Brownson of R.R. 4, Marmora, was second in the owner sampler section.

the first service and 50 Inuits the second.

The Marmora visitors found that it is a small world after all. While on one of their "escapades" they stopped at one of the few restaurants for lunch and met Milton Fluke, another Marmora man who is working and living in Frobisher Bay. Naturally they had quite a chat with Milton.

Then, about an hour and a half before their departure from Frobisher Bay Scheduled for 4 a.m. Monday, they met two other Marmora men, Tom Cassidy and Mac Casselman at the airport. They were waiting between flights to catch a plane going to Pond Inlet above the Arctic Circle to do some fishing for about a week.

The Marmora men arrived back in Ottawa about 9 a.m. tired but in good spirits and very impressed with that part of Canada.

process machine shoots from the positive pictures on to a negative film. When it is run back through a processor it is reversed back to a positive. The photographs and ad designs are shot through a screen which breaks them down into tiny dots. This allows a contrast of colours to develop so instead of printing only black and white, shades of grey appear as well. Once the pictures have been processed and trimmed, they, along with the news columns, are run through a waxer to give them an adhesive backing before going to layout.

Meanwhile, the advertising staff is kept busy designing the ads. Creativity as well as the desired information are needed to ensure satisfied customers.

Undoubtedly, the most involved and important part of the newspaper is the layout. It has to be designed both for attractiveness and simplicity and could make the difference between selling the paper or not. There are so many do's and don'ts of the layout, something that soon became evident to me when I was introduced to the "old drawing board". It's a problem of getting a sense of space. You have to learn how to use the area available without having it become cluttered or, in the other extreme, leaving too much unused space. Another problem to avoid is "tombstoning". Setting up two separate articles parallel to each other is a mistake because running two headlines one beside the other is simply not allowed. Although the layout of the paper is very style oriented, what is attractive is usually accepted as correct. So, as in every other job, common sense and taste dictate.

When each page of the newspaper was arranged, they went back into the darkroom to emerge in the form of page negatives. To the newcomer, they looked like nothing more than giant X-rays...with one exception. The page negatives were put on a table and a light was shone through them. Then, armed with paint brushes in hand, we used opaque paint to cover all the white spots showing through. This was done to avoid having black marks appear on the finished product. Apparently, some degree of skill is required in this task to avoid putting more paint on yourself than on the page negatives—something I obviously have yet to learn.

When the opaquing was finished, the paper was then ready to be sent to the Tweed press to be in the stores and mailboxes by the next afternoon.

Throughout the day, there's always the dreaded word hanging in the air...DEADLINE—it's an ever pressing situation. The newspaper business holds a bit of a contradiction here in that there's always an emphasis on speed but also on doing the job well. By Monday at noon, you don't know what the size of the paper will be. Then, when it starts to take shape by 5:30, you have to meet that deadline so you go for speed and try not to sacrifice the style in the process.

Even when you've only been briefly acquainted with the operation, one problem soon becomes evident...a single person has to be able to perform an endless stream of tasks. The key, therefore, is versatility, especially in the case of the editors. They have the responsibility of digging up the stories, writing them, and supplying the accompanying photography. The editors then select the news and layout the entire paper according to the material they have to work with. All in a day's work as they say, although it often stretches long into the night.

By 8 p.m. the paper had been put to bed. The whir of the typesetting machines was no longer heard, although, even shut down they still looked like they were after my job. Looking around the newsroom, the only evidence of the day's work were paper cuttings on the floor, red paint up my arms and the odd column the didn't quite make it. However, I knew that when the paper came out the next day, I had, in a small way, helped to put it there. (I also felt sure I knew every article word for word.) So please, the next time you pick up your local newspaper, treat it with TLC—that's part of me you're reading!

"The cost to the government would be less than $1 million and there is $58 million available for renewable energy projects," said Hobson, referring to the government renewable energy budgeting.

GOING

UNDERGROUND

BY ROSS LEES

Working for a newspaper often gives you a chance to see and do things that the normal everyday person would never get a chance to do. Last week, I got one of those chances, and it was a real experience for me.

While having flown in airplanes of various size and descriptions for many years now and having climbed to the roof of the Presbyterian Church in Madoc to get a story and pictures, heights are no stranger to me. But, like many people in the Madoc area, I have wanted to do a tour of the talc mine for some time and, last week, I got the chance.

Going underground (to about the 540 foot level) was a truly unique experience, but one that I enjoyed very much. However, as I came out, I realized that existing and working in those depths are two different things. I came out with a great deal of respect for the men who go down that shaft day after day and work in a cold, damp, dark atmosphere for their living.

Many of us in the area of Madoc have seen the above ground workings of the mine. Few have actually gone down the very narrow shaft leading into the inner drifts of the mine and, on a hot and muggy day, it's like travelling in minutes to another world. But I'm getting ahead of myself.

I showed up at the mine about 10:00 a.m. to meet the new mine manager, Mr. Ernest MacDonald, and the assistant mine manager, Mike Perreault (no relation to Gilbert of the Buffalo Sabres). Both of these men impressed me with their willingness to show me the complete workings of the mine and to answer any questions I might have. And, as we talked and they gave me information about the mine, I also discovered that those of us in the village are labouring under a very popular misconception about the mine. Everyone, at one time or another, has heard about the mine going under Moira Lake. Mike was quick to tell me that this was not true. "I heard that rumour as soon as I got into town and this could be a good chance to correct that misconception. The mine does not extend under the lake."

I had appeared for the interview in my normal working clothes, blue jeans, T-shirt and sneakers. As Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Perreault prepared to take me into the mine, both commented that I would need some more clothes. Mike took me into another building to outfit me with a heavy shirt to go over my T-shirt, a pair of coveralls, rubber boots, a belt and a hard hat. These additional clothes at first seemed totally unrealistic as we stepped out into hot, muggy temperatures above ground, especially since I had come well prepared with camera equipment. After spending some time seeing the above ground workings, I was becoming very uncomfortable. However, as we stood waiting for the cage to take us into the mine, I began to get some idea why I had been outfitted in this unusual paraphernalia. By just standing near the shaft, you could feel much cooler air rising from below ground and Mike advised me that the temperature in the mine would be somewhere between 40 and 50 degrees.

Finally, we boarded the cage and headed underground—but not before Mike had explained the method of communicating with the cage operator. Every time the cage stopped, you would hear various bells, almost like a telephone bell, both when the cages stopped and before it took off again. Mike explained that this was how people getting on or off the cage told the operator what they were doing and what they wanted him to do, you always waited for an identical signal from him to ensure he had received your message correctly.

Just before we finally boarded the cage, Mike had been asking me if I had ever been underground before. I answered in the negative and Mike asked me if I suffered from claustrophobia. Again, I answered in the negative and, as we boarded the cage, Mike began to tell me about a woman he had once shown through a mine. Minutes after they arrived in the mine, this woman had become hysterical and had to be carried out of the mine. (Just what I needed to hear as I watched those wet walls during our descent.) I suspect Mike was not only preparing me for what could happen underground, he was also trying to keep my mind off the fact that we would soon be well over 500 feet below ground, something he only partially succeeded in doing. While riding down that shaft, the depth we were travelling to was brought home to me when I had to swallow several times to clear my ears. Once we hit the bottom of the shaft and we entered the drift, I quickly forgot the depth and tried to concentrate on what Mike was saying, but my first look at a drift that far down was quite an experience.

I had felt the dramatic change in temperature as we rode the cage, but it wasn't until we hit the drift that I suddenly realized just how cold it was. Add to that a great deal of humidity, and I was suddenly glad of the extra shirt and coveralls. My adjustment to the darkness, the dampness and the cold was shortlived, however. Mike immediately started explaining the workings of the mine as we walked through many different drifts. I found myself reacting like a child in a candy store as I tried to see and hear everything, concentrate on what Mike was saying and still keep my wits about me to take a few pictures. Mike explained to me that it was very difficult to take pictures underground but that the humidity shouldn't bother the camera too much. As he said, the camera stood up to it very well, except when we tried to take pictures of the machinery in operation. I kept thinking that the dust was just too much to be able to get pictures, but Mike advised me that the problem was mostly the humidity rather than dust. After walking around for well over an hour, I realized what he was saying was true because my glasses had become fogged to the point that it was safer to take them off.

As we walked from drift to drift to see the different machinery and the various steps of bringing the talc to the surface, it suddenly dawned on me that I was completely lost and just how many drifts there were under the surface. Mike explained to me that this wasn't unusual, adding that new people in a mine have to be very careful about getting lost. I had to agree.

The time I spent underground was over all too quickly. While I was tired from all the walking, looking and listening, I was still eager to see every inch of the mine. My feet were blistered from walking in rubber boots that were slightly large for my feet, but again, I was glad I had them. At one point, we walked up a drift that had about 4-6 inches of water running along it and water was constantly seeping from the walls. I worried about my camera equipment as we walked through drifts where water was dripping from the ceiling, but we had only one instance when the flash would not work. Mike told me that water and fresh air were constant problems to be solved underground, but added that these problems had been handled well in this mine.

As we had travelled through the mine, Mike commented on the machinery, some of which was discarded in various areas of the mine. "This is really a mine of contrasts," he said. "In certain areas, we use very old methods of getting the talc out, while in other areas, we use the most modern methods presently available."

Back on the surface, the heat and the bright sunlight were almost overpowering. The sudden change in temperature meant that my camera was out of commission for several minutes as the lens was covered with condensation. It didn't take us long to get out of the coveralls and the rubber boots.

Mr. MacDonald expressed high hopes for the continued operation of the mine. "We've never hit bottom and it is hard to tell just how long we could be in business. I think we can mine here for a good many years yet, and, since we mine one of the finest quality talcs (if not the finest in North America), we anticipate an increased demand in the future. Several large companies and countries have expressed interest in Canada Talc and, along with our regular customers, our future looks bright." He added that talc is also being used as a filler product in such things as plastic, which will increase the demand. "At the present tonnage, this mine could be open for years to come and, if another system of developing the mine can be reached, we could be looking at additional manpower, also. The shaft presently goes down to the 620 foot level and we have a ramp that goes lower than that." If Mr. MacDonald's predictions come true, the talc mine in Madoc could become a very important industry in Madoc, which bodes well for everyone involved. "I'm predicting good things for this area," said Mr. MacDonald, "and I feel enough confidence in those predictions that I am moving my family to Madoc." Mr. MacDonald is a core mining engineer and has been involved in mining for thirty-two years, so we should be able to put some faith in his predictions.

Facts about the mine

The property has two shafts, Conley and Henderson. The Henderson Mine goes 430 feet below the surface and has been worked almost continuously since 1896, originally as an open pit; although it is no longer being used for hoisting, it serves as a ventilation shaft, escape way and water pumping; likewise the open pit is no more in operation.

The Conley Mine has been in operation since 1915 and presently mining the 560 foot level. At present a ramp is being developed dipping 15 percent.

The ore, once mined is crushed into mill storage and processed; the product then goes into paper bags which are placed on wooden ore pallets for transport or railway loading.

This product is used in paints, tile, linoleum, rubber products and many others as a filler.

Canada Talc also mines dolomite which is used for the Terrazzo Chip and talc filler product. In the building trade the Canada Talc White Chips are regarded as the best on the market for whiteness and hardness. The fines from the chips is used as a filler for roofing, rubber filler, insecticide filler, and markings of playing fields.

The mine employs approximately 20 people and produces approximately 15 to 20 thousand tons of product per year.

ONE FOOT IN THE FURROW

BY BOB TROTTER

It is a sad commentary in this country, that we live poor and die rich.

No other segment of the economic picture suffers from this malady more than farmers. For many years, farmers worked hard and built an equity in their land. When they retired, the farm could be sold and the farmer had a few years of relative ease before going to that big ranch in the sky.

It is no longer true, though. Farmers are facing a double whammy these days. Net farm incomes, which economists predicted would decline by at least 11 percent this year, will decline even more than the guessperts said.

Drought, high interest rates and some oversupply will contribute to this greater decline.

An even more serious aspect of the whole picture is that farmers can no longer depend on the price of land keeping them in business. When you need a loan, the banks consider how much money you may have and how much equity.

The amount of the loan is based on those figures.

But land prices are dropping alarmingly. This is a farmer's most important asset while he is still on the land and when he retires. This drop will compound the decrease in net income for farmers.

Add this to what the weather has done in some areas of North America and look for some dreadful consequences in the next few years. Droughts in Texas, Saskatchewan and the Great Plains States in between, will mean drastic production drops in grains and livestock. Frosts in Ontario affected the corn crop.

A poor harvest is predicted again this year in the USSR. Parts of Europe have also been hit by drought. It may be another of those terrible cyclical things nature throws at mankind every 50 or 60 years.

Some people have been comparing the present droughts in Texas and north to Saskatchewan as even worse than the drastic dustbowl of the Dirty Thirties. If the rains do not come next year, the results will be felt almost immediately. It took four or five years for the drought to manifest in all its horrible aspects 50 years ago. It will not take that long this time. No fences, continuous tilling, one-crop harvest, huge farms, no summer fallowing, empty granaries around the world will all work together to bring the whole thing home to us in a couple of years.

And I mean home: right to our own dining tables.

If you think food prices are high now, wait until shortages are world wide.

I have said it before and been laughed at for saying it. But I believe this energy shortage is just a foretaste of worse things to come. We all feel the energy pinch but we will feel a shortage of food to a far greater degree.

If disastrous crop failures occur in Canada and the United States, most of the world will go hungry. A hungry man is a desperate man. A desperate man will stop at nothing to feed a starving family. What follows is war. It is just that simple for me and maybe I see it from a distorted viewpoint because I have always espoused the cause of agriculture and see little wrong with the way farmers have tried to organize in this country.

I have supported the formation of marketing boards and the efforts of farmers to compete in the market place. With all the legislative support, farmers are still in trouble. I can see many of them simply walking off the land and leaving it to dry up and blow away. Many did years ago. It could happen again.

All the more reason to listen carefully to what farmers are saying and give them the support they deserve.

An inside look at the Madoc Talc Mine

Madoc's Talc mine could have a very interesting, profitable and long future according to Ernest MacDonald, the present mine manager. The Connally Mine presently supplies all of the ore to produce the talc and it has been mined since 1915. Twenty people are employed in the mine, which produces fifteen to twenty thousand tons of product annually. With the product now being used as filler in the making of other products, such as plastic, and with other countries quickly becoming interested in Madoc talc, Mr. MacDonald is confident the mine will be open for many years to come.

Pictured on this page is an outside view of the mine, a branching drift within the mine, chunks of talc wired with explosives just prior to being blasted into smaller chunks for processing and a water reservoir within the mine. According to Mike Perreault, the Canada Talc Mine is a mine of contrasts. In one part of the mine, you can find older methods of obtaining the ore while in other areas you will find some of the most modern and advanced methods being used. Contrary to popular belief the ore is not mined from beneath Moira Lake.

On the front page of this section, we see the newly renovated drift of the Henderson Mine, which is now used as a ventilation shaft, escape way and water pumping. To get to the area where this picture was taken, you sometimes had to walk through six inches of water in the bottom of the drift.

EDITOR'S VIEWPOINT

Heading for an election in Ontario

BY JOHN BENNETT

I am going to make a rash prediction based on two of the Provincial government's latest advertising campaigns. There is going to be an election probably this fall. I believe this because Premier William Davis and the rest of the good old boys who run this province are up to some old tricks again.

No doubt you have heard some of the 'Preserve it, conserve it' commercials on the radio or TV. They were produced by the Ontario Ministry of Energy supposedly to convince us to use less energy particularly less gasoline but is that their real message.

The Globe and Mail reports that these commercials also carry a subliminal message aimed, not at saving energy, but maintaining the Progressive Conservative Party in power. The noted expert in subliminal advertising, Wilson Bryan Key, a former professor at the University of Western Ontario in London who has written several books on the subjects told the Globe "What they are really suggesting is that life is good in Ontario with the Progressive Conservative Party".

The Ontario Ministry of Energy disagrees; they say, no way the ads were designed only to promote energy conservation. However, Mr. Wilson disagrees. "It is just too good. The implication here is the PC party is watching the store. There are no accidents in advertising when you spend that much money."

Of course the Liberal Leader Stuart Smith agrees with the charges, claiming his training as a psychiatrist taught the subliminal message. The NDP leader Mike Cassidy says that, whether or not the charges are correct the ads should be discontinued.

Personally, I have no doubt that a subliminal message was part of the plan but not just from this evidence alone. The CBC recently refused to run ads produced by the Ontario Ministry of Revenue not on the grounds that they were subliminal but because the CBC thought they might confuse people. The commercials were to be shown this month as part of a blitz campaign to accompany fliers going out to senior citizens informing them of tax benefits they are entitled to. Sounds all right doesn't it? What better thing can a government do than to actively inform its constituents of a pot of gold it has created for them?

What immediately aroused my suspicion was the speed with which the government is moving; they want to get the money out in a big hurry. A spokesman for the Ministry of Revenue has been quoted as saying that the grants to seniors will be for 1980. However no system has yet been devised to recover any overpayments made to those who leave the province or die prior to the end of 1980. When was the last time that you can remember that government was willing to pay a year refunds before the year ended? Personally I can't think of one example.

Don't get me wrong. I'm not opposed to improved benefits to senior citizens, on the contrary I think they deserve more than they get. What I am concerned about is a political party which happens to power using public money and government programs to promote itself. This practice threatens the very nature of our society. It is a cynical abuse of power and an insult to our intelligence.

So there is no question in my mind now that the Tories are gearing up for an election and it should come soon quite likely this fall.

The Tories' use of government money to promote themselves brings the whole question of institutional advertising into question. Is it proper for governments and other public institutions to engage in propaganda at any time?

There are several campaigns, like Participation, that appear to be good and positive steps for our society but does that make it right for government to attempt to mold the public rather than simply represent their constituencies which they were elected to do? It probably is one of the most complicated moral choices our society has to face.

The parties in power will claim it is a necessity and an age old practice. The Liberals would probably say that it is alright as long as the government doesn't misuse its power as they charge the Tories have done in the 'Conserve It, Preserve It' commercials. The social democrats would probably favour setting up another bureaucracy to review government advertising; another bureaucracy. I don't think any of those is the proper choice but I am not certain what would be the best solution.

One part of the issue is very clear-institutional advertising done by government-related organizations or crown corporations. These organizations, such as the Canadian Development Corporation or Ontario Hydro are often the centre of political debate as various segments of our society argue for or against their activities and policies. These companies and others have reacted to public criticism by mounting ad campaigns supporting themselves and their policies in attempt to mould public opinion. This I find very repugnant. Here are institutions created by the public for the public's use interfering with public debate and using the public's money to do it. This smells too much like Big Brother for me.

In the case of Hydro it has been proven by Hydro's own surveys that 49 per cent of Ontarians oppose the construction of more reactors, a very significant number of their owners. How do they respond to this knowledge? Not by trying share holders, the public. No. Hydro responds by spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on advertising and public relations in attempt to change our minds. More money than Hydro spends on research into the disposal of radioactive wastes.

Hydro is not the only crown corporation or public institution to take this route in the recent past. Their action and the actions of the Ontario Government call into question the advertising practices of public funded bodies. Maybe it is time that the entire notion of government advertising came under the serious scrutiny.

WE GET LETTERS

No censorship needed

Dear Sir:

If Mr. Trotter has ever ploughed with a team and walking plow, then surely he is old enough to decide for himself, and by himself, those films or movies he wishes to see. Only after viewing, or at least viewing up to the point where one leaves in disgust or from boredom, can anyone decide what is smut or not smut. What is smut to you may be beautifully well done to me.

For some time, particularly since World War Two, Canadians have been asking and letting "George to do it". George being the provincial and federal governments and often municipal government as well. It's time we did for ourselves and a good place to start might be deciding which movies or films we wish to see. It is parental responsibility, not Queen's Park, to decide which films our children see. Thinking members of the public, and farmers are thinkers or they wouldn't be farming very long. don't need the assistance of Ms. Marg Brownson and her half dozen high salaried board members, who, in the name of "guardian of Ontario's cultural chastity", sit through some 1200 movies per year - that's the equivalent of 300 - 8 to 10 hour days - and at a darn sight more pay that I receive for pitching bales or cutting dead elms. I wouldn't mind changing salaries but not jobs (unless a real juicy film comes along).

My point is we don't need the censor board at all - nor many of the other government agencies, rules and regulations. Any movie or book with the slightest cut or hint of censorship is immediately a hit or best seller and receives many plugs - at our expense - on CBC and in the daily press.

Prof. Jean Smith ("The backward step in censorship - Sunday Star, 3 Aug., 1980) states: "(Movies) are the only medium where artistic creativity yields before appointed guardians of an undefined public morality". She goes on to say, "The Ontario Board of Censors exists as an intellectual vacuum, its deliberations are shrouded in secrecy-and is accountable to no one." Any agency or board that is unaccountable is not necessary. The appointment of Ms. Brown was simply political maneuvering that may yet backfire. TV and radio are subject only to the Criminal Code of Canada.

Mr. Trotter, we don't need beef marketing boards, big agri-business, corporate farms, large monopolistic supermarkets, etc. or many items as expressed in your columns. The family farm is still the backbone of Canadian agriculture and the family can decide which movies they wish to see or not to see - particularly since it often involves driving 80 km. to the nearest movie theatre.

While Canadian authors are still having a tough time publishing at home, our film industry is beginning to gel. Films are one finished product we can market worldwide, rather than "exporting our raw materials and natural (human) resources". Like our forests and agricultural products, people are also renewable, and our most important resource. Our actors, producers, directors, technicians, etc. and those aspiring to be will do more for Canada here than in Hollywood or France. Let's keep an increasing share of this talent at home.

To return to the farm, in one area at least it is illegal for a bull or stallion to service a cow or mare in public. Young people from the farm have a very healthy attitude toward sex and need little if any sex education outside the home - no doubt for the very reason that they have viewed from a very early age on, this natural biological mammalian function.

I don't know who gave Mr. Trotter a "mandate as a farm writer" and he is a good one, but perhaps he should keep both feet in the furrow. Then we won't be wondering where the other one is.

Sincerely
John Hutt

Flood plains

the real threat

Dear Sir:

John Bennett's article on the problems of sub-dividers and prospect builders, (Editor's Viewpoint - Municipal government and development, July 30) are very well taken: it takes years in some cases to wade through the red tape.

However, you left out what is probably the ultimate in frustration: to go through all the phases you mention and then plunge into "Flood Control". This should be looked into first.

I do believe that unless we, the people, stop "Flood Control" now before we have a terrible burden to carry, everyone will drown in the vast control that is created by this department. Large cities, villages and farms will feel this awesome threat.

Half of Havelock and Norwood, for instance, would be flooded out by this one department.

BY RON REID

The arithmetic of birds

Right now, in mid-August, we are surrounded by more birds than at any other time of the year. In the process of preparing for migration, our summer birds are much quieter now, and their colours more subdued, but their numbers are swelled by the addition of this year's crop of nestlings.

The American bird population each autumn has been estimated at somewhere close to 20 billion. By next spring that number is cut in half, so that each year's crop of young birds is matched by a corresponding mortality, and the over-all population stays the same. That means each year about 10 billion birds perish across America - but where do they all go?

The vast majority fall victim to natural predation, and end up feeding the hawks and owls, foxes and raccoons, and other predators that depend on meat for their survival. There's nothing sinister about that - predation is a part of nature, and without this natural balance, we would soon tire of a robin population that doubled every year!

Others die in natural catastrophes, such as ice storms or wildfires. And a relatively small number - about 2 percent, are killed by the activities of man, according to Richard Banks of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. As you might expect, hunting is the largest part of this man-made mortality, with about 120 million casualties per year. Collisions with cars, T.V. towers, and picture windows are another significant loss, amounting to about 60 million birds a year.

But despite their publicity, pollution disasters such as oil spills cause relatively few deaths, in the order of 15,000 per year. While we should still be doing our utmost to prevent the unnecessary and cruel deaths caused when birds and oil mix, it is perhaps useful to remember that the less dramatic changes wrought by man, such as habitat losses and high-speed-highways, are far more important factors in the long run.

COLLEGES

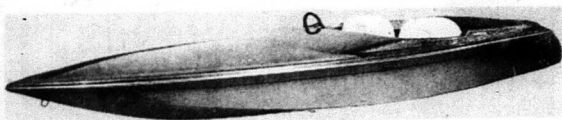

The Colleges of Trent have been an integral part of the University since beginning in 1964 and each has a distinctive personality and design. The two original Colleges, Peterborough and Catharine Parr Traill, are in the heart of the city of Peterborough and both are graced with shaded groves and stately Victorian architecture. The three newer Colleges, at northern edge of Peterborough on Nassau Campus, are striking examples of modern architecture. Chambray College holds a hint of the medieval castle in its tower, great hall and courtyard. Nearby, Lady Eaton College, with covered walkways reminiscent of cloisters of the past, rises on a gently rolling hill. Across the river are the red roofs of Otonabee College, which sits atop a ridge by cedar groves. Effectively designed for living, teaching and study during the academic year, the Colleges double as conference centres in summer, providing some 1000 rooms, more than 500 singles, meeting rooms and dining facilities, auditoriums which seat up to 1000 persons.

ROUGH

and Coming Events

THE CAMPUS

Rolling hills, cedar, maple, elm, the Otonabee River, striking buildings, a wildlife sanctuary, space to wander alone, places to gather, books, computers, classrooms, pubs, labs, tennis courts, places for reflection, places for activity; all these characterize Trent University.

THE PEOPLE

Who are the students at Trent? Young adults fresh from high school, students who have spent time travelling or working, teachers, mechanics, housewives, office workers, even grandmothers and grandfathers beginning third or fourth careers. They come from Peterborough, Scarsdale, Cornwall and Moscow, Port Hope, St. Andrew's, Stoney Creek and Sheffield; Toronto and Yellowknife, Creemore and Cavan; Montreal, Edmonton, Sanudo, Eldorado. They bring different experiences and backgrounds, viewpoints and values. They come for as many reasons as there are people. The one thing they share is their experience at Trent.

THE LIBRARY

Rising from the west bank of the Otonabee, the Bata Library is the hub of the University. With a quarter of a million books, plus magazines and journals, maps, aerial photographs and government documents, Trent's library is a major resource for the University and community at large. The Library provides quiet study areas for 800 students, as well as music listening rooms and language laboratories.

STUDIES AT TRENT

Two thousand students and 187 faculty members participate in more than four hundred courses in 18 areas of study. Teaching and learning at Trent involve the exchange of ideas, the examination of accepted values and the consideration of new tentative points of view. Small tutorials are a featured of every program we offer. With eight or nine students taking part, these are small enough to facilitate communication, and large enough to provide a healthy range of viewpoint.

The day Yorkie tried to murder the publican I had this strange sense of foreboding.

Although I was still sweating and cursing in the heat of the Western Desert when Yorkie was hammering on the publican's door in Leeds, and was preparing to throttle him.

You see, the publican had been messing around with Yorkie's wife, and Yorkie was not particularly enamoured of the situation, although from all accounts the woman was just as enthusiastic about the arrangement as the publican was.

There we were in the desert when the affair first came to light, and Yorkie came stumbling into my tent, extremely disturbed and filled to the brim with anguish and alcohol, and gave me the glad tidings. His mother had written one of her rare epistles and in it she had laid it all out, giving her son a brief but nonetheless absorbing and picturesque description of the activities in which Yorkie's wife and the friendly, accommodating public house keeper had been indulging.

I told Yorkie I would try to get him home on compassionate leave if he would be so considerate as to evacuate my premises toot sweet and allow me to complete my repose.

I eventually got him home, but it took longer than I can afford the time to tell you about it.

First of all I wrote an official request to the Officer Commanding, asking for Yorkie's immediate repatriation to the United Kingdom in order to smooth out his domestic affairs at the same time outlining his pressing desire to wreak the appropriate vengeance.

I also mentioned that Yorkie's wife was shocked up with the publican.

The Colonel was a man of instant indecision. He completely ignored my letter.

So I then wrote to the General Officer Commanding the Division, but I later discovered that he had already departed on an inspection tour of the British Isles, so we were right back where we'd started.

Then came the day when we were having a bit of a party in the regimental mess, having luckily liberated a consignment of brandy on its journey from Berlin to the Afrika Korps Headquarters, for which timely intervention a lance corporal was eventually awarded the Military Medal. He was recommended for the Victoria Cross, but somebody up there in the higher echelons reduced it, partly because he hadn't been invited to partake of the spoils.

And it was over the odd noggin of this excellent Napoleon that I managed to inject Yorkie's story into the foggy ear of the Colonel, who immediately expressed a sort of stunned surprise and dismay, as though he had never heard anything about it before, but certainly intended to take some action now that it had been brought to his attention by my so thoughtful self.

He thereupon began to forget all about it and embarked upon a stirring account of one of his most recent encounters with the opposing team, and the military genius with which the affair had been handled by him.

But as luck would have it I found myself, a few minutes later, in the haughty presence of the visiting general, and after a couple of good strong ones, I plucked up enough courage to broach the subject of Yorkie's dilemma, and the dastardly behaviour of the publican in Leeds who had so wantonly alienated the affections of Yorkie's espoused.

The General, of course, was horrified and wanted to know why I hadn't brought

The last straw

this very serious matter to his attention earlier.

You know how the scenario goes in these cases.

Naturally I endeavored to maintain as much of my composure as the circumstances would permit, and to cut a hell of a long story down to a mere trickle, he did promise to see what could be done about it.

And as far as he was concerned that was it and all about it. But little did he know that with my customary singleness of purpose I had been able to foresee the effect of a sickening clarity and that I already had the necessary parchment in my pocket that would immediately authorize the compassionate posting, and I produced it without delay. In an alcoholic haze that must have seemed to him like the London fog in November, he fiddled around in all his pockets for some kind of a writing utensil, finally giving up the search with a little pat of his tunic, suddenly recalling the fact that he had unfortunately left his one and only pen in his belt.

But I had also foreseen that possibility and quick as a wink I had a pen in his hand and I gently guided it into the facsimile of his signature on the appropriate dotted line.

And the next day Yorkie was on his way. Before he left I was careful to remonstrate with him against the advisability of violence, and the penalties that would automatically ensue.

No violence, said Yorkie, loading his service revolver.

And don't take the law into your own hands, said I.

I won't, said Yorkie, just his neck.

And with that he was off to England.

To be precise it was four o'clock in the morning when he arrived at the station in his home town. The pub in question was close by and he made his way there forthwith, right to the place where his wife was now working overtime.

He thereupon hammered on the door with sufficient impact to waken half of Yorkshire.

After a period of time a woman's voice came to him softly from the other side.

Go away, she carolled, we're closed.

It's me, says Yorkie, in a still, small voice like the evening wings of doom.

Who's me, says she.

Open up this bloody door, yells Yorkie at the apex of his lungs, and you'll soon find out.

Whereupon, having heard those comforting tones, and recognizing at once the dulcet tones of her lord and master, she turned and fled to the sanctity of her employer's boudoir, where the publican awaited her with some misgiving.

But not before she had opened the door wide enough for Yorkie's thick service boot to be delicately placed, and he shot into the hall like a tornado, following closely behind her and yelling expletives at her in his modulated, gentle and cultured voice.

The sounds of high wrath reached the ears of the sensitive publican, who shot from the bed like a bullet and tried to make his getaway by means of a rickety fire escape.

Now it appears that the publican had only one leg, a fact of which Yorkie had so far been sadly ignorant, but he made the distance with the speed and expertise of a three minute miler, and he was half way through the window when Yorkie descended upon his person with the ferocity of a rhinoceros with rheumatism.

Our of sheer bravado, however mistakenly, he then turned to face Yorkie in an abortive attempt to bluff out the sad situation.

Who the hell are you then, he wanted to know in as dignified a tone as he could muster at such short notice.

What are you, he says, the HOME GUARD or something?

HOME GUARD, yells Yorkie, forgetting momentarily the purpose of his visit.

HOME GUARD indeed, he says again, I'll have you know I'm in the EIGHTH ARMY.

And with that he gave the publican a massive shove that fetched him right away from the window and sent him cascading down the wide, oak staircase.

One leg or not, he was on his feet again in the flash of a duck's whatnot, and went haring down the stairs like somebody possessed, with Yorkie in full flight behind him.

Half way down he lost his balance and toppled the rest of the way, his crutch flying through the air like a boomerang, and his one good leg stuck out to the side like a barber's pole, whizzing over and over like a windmill in a hurricane.

In the meantime the meandering wife was out in the street screaming blue murder and inviting anyone within earshot to come to the aid of the party.

A policeman who happened to be loitering nearby flicked the red end off his cigarette and tucking the remains in his tunic pocket, he nonchalantly sauntered to the succor of the distressed maiden.

What's going on 'ere then, he wanted to know officially.

It's him, sobs the distraught female, and he's in there murdering Mr. Jones!

Oh, now then, says the cop, he can't do that, and he strolls inside.

Now it didn't take him very long to size up the situation, nor did he waste too much time recognizing Yorkie and comprehending precisely what was taking place.

Better come with me, says the copper, with a rare dignity.

He thereupon helped the hapless, one-legged publican to his foot, and took Yorkie's arm. When they were outside he asked Yorkie what the hell he thought he was at.

I came to murder the bastard, says Yorkie.

Well now, you can't very well do that, says the copper kindly, after some consideration, you could get yourself into trouble, don't you see, and if you ask my opinion she's hardly worth the trouble of swinging for, now is she?

Two days later Yorkie presented himself at the entrance to my tent, a little sullen but not altogether subdued.

That didn't take long, said I, didn't you stay for the funeral?

Ha ha, says Yorkie sarcastically, as he unpacked his kit bag and scattered swag all over the floor of the tent.

Some time later, when he was fit to talk about it, he told me how the cops had him sent back so he wouldn't do any further damage.

I warned you, said I reprovingly, that violence wasn't the answer, and now you've ruined your chances altogether.

Well, said Yorkie, in that thick Yorkshire brogue of his, I reckon you'd have done the same thing if he'd said that to you. It's enough to make any self-respecting Desert Rat see crimson.

What was, said I rather unwisely.

When he said that, Yorkie insisted, I just had to push him down the stairs.

When he said what? I asked.

When he asked me if I was in the HOME GUARD, says Yorkie with a degree of disgust.

Our mistake Water meters go into effect October 1st, 1980

Last week, members of council and the village clerk suggested to us that an article on the implementation of the new water metres might help to avoid any confusion. Well, we tried but failed miserably. We found ourselves the victims of confusion in the opening paragraph of the article.

The water metres will go into effect on October 1st, but in 1980, not 1981 as we said in the article. By-law number 997 went into effect in May of 1978. By-law number 1057, or amendments to the original by-law has now had its first and second readings by council and will likely receive the third reading at the next regularly scheduled council meeting on September 2nd and will go into effect on October 1st.

We apologize to the council and the clerk-treasurer for any inconvenience this article may have caused. We feel that the remainder of the article was accurate and that our advice to the ratepayers of reading the by-law is sound. The by-law is an important one and is also well defined. It will affect you and you should ensure that you understand the by-law and its implications. If you have questions, contact Doug Parks at the village office.

Minutemen take series opener against Hoard's

Madoc Minutemen have taken a 1-0 in their best-of-three series with Hoard's Station after beating them 4-2 in a ten inning thriller last Thursday night.

Brian Armstrong's two-out single to left centre brought home the winning runs in the tenth inning. Terry Helps and Dave Fleming hit singles and Fleming had stolen second base to put him in scoring position.

Madoc had opened the scoring in the first inning on a series of Hoard's errors. Fleming singled and made it to third when the Hoard's pitcher, after fielding a bouncer by Clayt Whiteman, fired it passed the second baseman. He reached home while Hoard's was trying to run down Whiteman between first and second. Whiteman was eventually safe.

The Minutemen widened their lead in the second inning when Harold Bailey hit a broken bat single to left and, passed ball and a stolen base later, was on third and able to score on Helps' sacrifice fly. Bailey reportedly made a magnificent "Ron Leffore" slide at home.

Hoard's tied the game in the fourth inning when Tunney singled with two men on driving them both home, and the score remained tied until Madoc's tenth-inning outburst.

Madoc got eleven hits in all with Robert Nickle (3 for 3), Bailey (2 for 4) and Fleming (2 for 5), leading the team. Armstrong gave up five hits in all and struck out three while walking four.

The next game will be sometime this week.

Eldoras lose to potent Ayr attack

The Eldorado Eldoras fell victim to a very potent and physical Ayr attack on Sunday afternoon when they were defeated 6-4 in a very controversial game. The Ayr

Randy Gray attempts to beat out a bunt and further his own cause in the game on Sunday. However, the Ayr team put their bats to good use to beat the Eldoras 6-4.

Here, the Ayr second baseman is called out and thrown out when he flattened Scott Shaw after being tagged out at the plate. Ayr plays a very physical game and took advantage of every opportunity to win the game. The Eldoras travel to Ayr this Sunday for the second game in the series.

team was an unknown quantity as far as the Eldoras were concerned prior to Sunday's game, but now, down by one game, the Eldoras must come back with the best game of their season to beat Ayr in their home park this Sunday, August 24th, at 4 p.m., if they hope to continue in the rural Ontario championships.

Randy Gray, the Eldoras' pitcher, got off to a slow start in the first inning of Sunday's game as he walked several Ayr hitters. When the first half of the inning was over, Eldorado was down by two runs on an Ayr double that scored two runs and saw another runner thrown out at home plate. Gray then settled down into his normal, steady game and forced the Ayr batters to beat him with the lumber. Ayr was unable to score a run in the second inning while the Eldoras narrowed the lead to one run.

In the third inning, Ayr again mounted an attack that resulted in two runs being scored. Eldorado got one of those runs back in the fourth inning before giving up one run in each of the sixth and seventh innings to give Ayr all the runs they needed to win the game. Eldorado scored two more runs in the sixth and seemed to have a rally going with runners on second and third with two men out when the third base runner was called out for taking a leadoff when an Ayr infielder stepped into the pitcher's mound and the Eldorado runner did not immediately return to third or make a play to home. This call led to a rather heated discussion with the umpires, who had failed to make a similar call earlier in the game. However, as the Eldoras soon found out, you can't argue with the umpires, especially if you're arguing against the rule book.

Both teams seemed evenly matched with Ayr winning the game on timely hits that scored runs. Eldorado was unable to mount a long ball hitting attack against the strategically placed Ayr fielders but did manage to get many base runners on the base paths with a consistent bunting attack. Ayr could not seem to adjust to this bunting game and, when the Eldoras runners forced Ayr to make the good throwing play to get the out, Ayr often made mistakes as several runners beat throws to first base. Ayr's strength seems to be at the plate when they are batting but their defense is still suspect and, if the Eldoras can mount a consistent offensive attack using some of the strong hitting they have exhibited throughout league play and in the playoffs, they can defeat this team. Several sparkling catches, especially by Ringelmann and Franks, prevented Ayr from scoring more runs, but Eldorado must unlimber their bats and simply outscore this tough Ayr team.

Extremely physical play on the part of the first and second basemen of the Ayr team resulted in the second baseman being ejected from the game and, as the game wore on, tempers flared as each team showed how much they wanted to win this game. Coach Shaw commented after the game that he would have liked to have seen his team win this game so that they could have been assured of returning to Eldorado to play the third game.

"Now, we'll just have to go up their and play our best game and hope it is enough to force that third game. That game next Sunday will be a tough one because they will have the home park and the hometown fans. It would be nice if we could have a lot of fans from here to travel to Ayr with the team. We'll need that support up there." Ayr is about fifteen or twenty miles on the other side of Guelph.

Break-ins result in charges

Two local men and a Hamilton area man were arrested by the Madoc Detachment OPP on the 16th of August and charged with two counts of break, enter and theft. Last Thursday night or early Friday morning, the Madoc OPP were called to investigate break-ins at the Crossroads Garden Centre and the Madoc and District Recreation Centre. A subsequent investigation resulted in the arrest of Angus Clifford Logan Ray of Bannockburn, Scott

Randall Baumhour of Madoc and Scott Douglas Reynolds of Hamilton.

Approximately $150 damage was done to the recreation centre while $15-$20 damage was done at the garden centre. A small amount of cash was stolen from each of the places while a radio was also stolen from the garden centre. The radio was recovered but, to date, no money has been recovered.

Beauty and the beast

Beautifying the downtown core of Madoc may be an impossible task. Several months ago, some students from CHSS put on a fashion show to raise money to go towards that beautification. Shortly after the original trees were placed on the streets of Madoc, vandals damaged many of them to the point that they had to be replaced. Last Friday night, many of the remaining trees were again vandalised, with only about four trees left still standing by Saturday morning.

Damage seemed to vary according to the whim of the vandals. Earlier last week, one tree was uprooted and laid over its cement container. Last Saturday morning, one tree was broken in half, another container was partially tipped over, flowers were uprooted in another container and a container in front of the Beamish and Johnston's Drug store was completely smashed.

Vandalism has always been a part of every small town's lot. True, vandalism is not unique to a small town, but it is certainly more noticeable. The trees in the downtown area of Madoc have been somewhat controversial ever since they were placed on the street. Many people felt they would be more of a bother than anything else. Others thought prettier containers would be more appropriate. Still others predicted that the trees would never last and that money would be better spent on another project. Now, it appears their prediction was true and that trees or planters will never last on the streets of Madoc.

However, amid predictions of doom and gloom, some enterprising students combined with the Chamber of Commerce to at least try and make the streets of Madoc a little more pleasant for the residents and visitors of the village. Many good comments have been heard throughout the village, both by residents and tourists in the area, since the trees appeared on the streets. The irony of the situation was apparent on Saturday and Sunday of this week. What had originally been set out to beautify the streets, became a symbol of the problem in the village for all to see and actually detracted greatly from the beauty of the village.

At the present time, we have no idea who actually did the damage. It does, however, seem unfair that a few irresponsible people can dictate what can and cannot be done within a village and that so many people will allow this trend to continue. Everybody seems willing to sit back and let the police take care of the situation. Why get involved? Isn't that why we have a police detachment in the village?

Yes, we do have a police detachment in the village but they are often spread all too thin in their area and they have the problems of other villages to contend with also. They need the help of the people in each and every town to help solve many of these problems that we look on as small until we total up the bill at the end of the year. If anyone saw a person or persons tampering with those trees, the problem could be solved if an example is made of the vandals. If you can help, call the police and tell them what you know. It may be asking too much to ask that the vandals, if caught, eventually replace the trees but, if they are forced to work long and hard to replace their damage, they may do a little of the policing themselves the next time. Surely it's worth a try.

Bannockburn news

We have had a lot of guests visiting from out of town these last few weeks. We extend a welcome to you all. Some of these friends were, Mr. and Mrs. Larry Reid and family visiting Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Reid, for a few days. Mr. and Mrs. Garnet Budd were happy to have Mr. and Mrs. McMann visiting from Midland, Ontario. U.S. Lakes were happy to have Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Andrews and family visiting from Valleyfield, Newfoundland, for two weeks.

Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Dale Wood on the birth of their first child named Douglas. (Such a great name). We are also extending Best Wishes to the newlyweds around town, Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Evans and Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Woods.

Well, for the baseball fans the season has come to a very superb end. Both the Angels and the Devils lost in the finals by three runs. The games were exciting to watch as well as play in. We really appreciate all those special people who faithfully followed the ball teams to all their games to cheer them on. Without these friends and neighbours from Bannockburn I'm sure the games would have a lot less fun. Thankyou everyone.

We were very sorry to hear about Mr. Daryl Anderson's broken ankle. We certainly hope he has a speedy recovery. Well that's it this week in the news. Since I am home from holidays the news should get a little more regular. You can help by calling me with your news. Thankyou.

The August meeting of the Queensboro branch of the Women's Institute was held in the W.I. Hall on Tuesday evening August 12.

The meeting began with a pot luck supper at 6:30 with 10 members and one visitor present, followed by a short business discussion. The roll call was "a childhood book I liked", and current events followed.

Mrs. Ken Cassidy conducted a program of comic songs, and a quiz on energy. Mrs. Arthur Holmes showed slides of her quilt exhibit in Toronto and also some local scenes.

Earle Bongard

Using skills he learned 50 years ago

BY JEANNETTE MOORE

The days of cream separators, horse-drawn buggies and rumble seat cars are over and few of us get a chance to relive some of the enjoyable experiences associated with such old-time methods and equipment.

But Earle Bongard, a Norwood farmer who formerly worked in the old Norwood Register printing shop, gets the chance every holiday weekend to work on the first-invented method of turning to a newspaper, a method which, even as a 13-year-old boy when he apprenticed as a platen printing pressman, was one retained only in small villages like Norwood.

It was a happy chance that brought Mr. Bongard to the attention of Margaret MacKelvie, Lang Century Village curator, the day she came to pick up an old Norwood Register press which had been donated to the Lang museum by former Register owner Don Mullen. Mr. Bongard happened to be on the street at the time and he spoke to Mrs. MacKelvie about the years he had worked on the old press. The curator was quick to urge him to take part in demonstrations when the press was set up at Lang and Mr. Bongard was equally quick to accept.

"I have been showing others at Lang Village how to operate the press", he said. "It still works as good as ever and it is nice to know it will continue to be kept on working demonstration."

To hear how the Norwood Register was once printed leaves anyone involved with present modern publishing equipment wondering how on earth they were able to cope. When Earle Bongard first started working on the Register in 1930 the paper was owned by Mark W. Bailey who had worked on the Winnipeg Free Press and also on a city paper in the U.S. before coming to Norwood. It was he that taught the 13-year-old apprentice the pressman's trade.

"The platen press at Lang is not the one we used to print the paper", said Mr. Bongard when I spoke to him recently. "That one has been scrapped. The museum press is a small job press used for printing such things as sales sheets. But it demonstrates the method used by small weekly newspapers of the 1930s."

At the time, city newspapers had big linotype machines which did just what the name describes - as an operator typed on a keyboard, hot metal was cast into a line of type. The bars were then placed in a frame the size of a page, a cardboard matrix or impression of the metal letters was taken and this was used to print the paper. But at the Norwood Register and most other weeklies a linotype machine was too expensive for the small operation and the original printing method was followed - that of buying boxes of individual letters from a casting company which were placed one letter at a time in a frame on a stone slab.

"If we got one page laid out in a day we were doing well", said Mr. Bongard. "All the weeklies of the time bought four pages of the national news from a Toronto publishing company. This was mailed to us every week and we printed another four pages of local news to go with it. We started setting up the paper on Monday and as the news was gathered and brought in we kept setting the type and printing until Thursday when the paper came out. There were two women gathering the news at the time I worked on the paper - Grace Golloher and Annie Sampson."

Mr. Bongard explained the tedious procedure of putting the type together to make words and sentences, the letters, so as to come out right in print, being a mirror image of the alphabet.

"We had thick and thin pieces of metal to place between the words to make the spaces and each line would have to be 'justified', that is, set in so as to press on both sides of the frame tight, otherwise you might get a whole page made up and when you lifted it off the stone slab the type would fall out. That would mean another day putting it back - type in such a mess was called pi. It would be completely scrambled whereas the type normally was kept in boxes in specified places such the same way a typewriter has keys placed to have the Es closer and the Xs and Ys farther away. If you were to ask me where a certain letter was I couldn't tell you. One just automatically reached for it."

As for pictures in this old-time Norwood Register you just used plates of animals, scenes or whatever was provided by the casting company. "We did have a few plates of people in the town made up - a reeve or minister - which would be used to illustrate a story in which that person took part." But you didn't have the weekly photo coverage which is possible today. Mr. Bongard would have thought the linotype a great help during his days on the paper, but in the 1960s that machine, which required an operator especially trained for the job, was superseded by an electric machine with a simple typewriter keyboard which any good typist can run.

By photographic methods it automatically produces a column of printed film which can be posted on a cardboard page which in turn is photographed and the resulting negative used to photographically print the paper.

The war brought an end to Earle Bongard's career as a printer. When he returned from his wartime job in an aircraft factory he married Margaret Marks and took over the work on her father's farm on the outskirts of Norwood where he still lives today.

But he does enjoy that trip back in time he makes every holiday weekend at Lang Century Village.

Unfortunately, it wasn't until mid-summer that some of the most cherished pieces of furniture and appliances arrived in the house. The Madoc Pump Organ, the Madoc sewing machine and the old cook stove are now in place in the house and have added that little extra touch to the heritage of the residence of Madoc. Add to that the old skates, the old photograph, the oxen yolk, the family bedroom, the sewing room and all of the other paraphernalia that combined to make a house a home in that period and you have a very impressive display at Heritage House. If you haven't been out to see it yet, come out this Saturday or any time this week and take the tour. We're sure you'll be as impressed as the many other visitors during the summer.

Sail safely through summer.

Associate diploma in agriculture course celebrates

In the past 100 years, thousands of Ontario farmers have graduated from the two year Associate Diploma in Agriculture course at the Ontario Agricultural College, University of Guelph. For many sons of farmers it was the natural avenue of higher education. One graduate who is now a politician says, "It has a high reputation within the agricultural community and has been of immeasurable help in my career." Murray Gaunt, MPP for Huron-Bruce, graduated in the fifties, became a turkey farmer, then a farm broadcaster and later a member of the Ontario legislature. He feels the program has given him a "Broader background, putting me in a league with people who have done well in agriculture, politics and broadcasting."

The course from which he graduated is celebrating its 100th anniversary this month at the University of Guelph. On Saturday and Sunday, July 19 and 20, graduates will gather on campus from all over the continent to mark the centennial.

Each tree draws life from the common soil and a million branches reach upward to share the sky.

The forest grows strong and beautiful.

In the same way, twenty-three million people draw strength from one nation, and with their roots deep in the land, share ideals of freedom, family and future.

100 years of success

In recognition of the anniversary, a program of Diploma Centennial Scholarships has been launched. Four awards of $500 each will be given annually to top students entering the second year of the course.

Described by a former director as the "Backbone of the University," the diploma program pre-dates the founding of the University by 84 years. When the Ontario Agricultural College became one of the three founding colleges of the newly formed University in 1964, the diploma course became part of the new curriculum.

In 1880 the School of Agriculture and Experimental Farm, located on the 500 acre Moreton Lodge Farm just south of Guelph, was six years old. In that year the small school was incorporated by the provincial government to become the Ontario Agricultural College and Experimental Farm, and the one-year course was expanded to become the two-year diploma course.

The 100 students in the fledgling school were an unruly lot of young men fresh from the farm. In those days all a boy needed to come to OAC was a Grade 8 education and farm experience. Consequently, students ranged from frisky teenagers to young men in their twenties who led administrators a merry chase. The first principal, Henry McCandless, resigned soon after his appointment on the suggestion of his employer, the provincial government, as a result of his handling of the students. He was persuaded by his lanky farm boys to introduce a daily two-hour break from farm work and studies for lying in the shade. In addition students prevailed on him to arrange for snacks to be brought to them mid-morning, mid-afternoon and at nine each evening. Like all students until 1928, the early "Dips" took part in compulsory farm labor. However, few students after the first year managed to soften the hard work as effectively as McCandless's boys.

When Principal William Johnston followed the first principal, he came to campus with the Inspector of Penitentiaries who had a remarkably calming effect on the student body.

Neal Stoskopf, current director of the program, estimates that well over 5,000 young people have passed through the course in the years since 1880. This year 158 students graduated, and in September the largest-ever freshman associate class will arrive on campus, a group of 220 young men and women.

Originally, graduates were trained for work on the farm, although even in the early days a few went into related jobs. One of the oldest living graduates, 93-year-old C. A. Whetham of Galt, worked for a time on his father's farm close to the present day location of the Rockton

Phillips-Sexsmith Wedding

The Reverend G. Adams officiated at a double ring ceremony for the exchange of marriage vows between Ethel Ann Sexsmith and Daniel Gordon Phillips in Trinity United Church, Madoc on Saturday, June 14th, 1980. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Earl Sexsmith and the late Mr. Sexsmith and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Phillips of Flesherton.

Soloist Ann Wilman was accompanied by Carol Brett who played the wedding music. The church was decorated with bouquets of white daisies, candelabra and sonja coloured candles.

Given in marriage by her brother-in-law Lloyd Watson, the bride chose a white floor-length polyester gown with a pleated skirt which fell from an empire waist to a floor-length train. The standup collar, wrists of the long sleeves and hem were trimmed with lace. A lace covered high-low cap held a two-tiered three-quarter length lace-trimmed veil. She carried a presentation bouquet of sonja-coloured roses and lily of the valley.

Linda Watson, the bride's only sister, was matron of honour and the bridesmaids were Mrs. Jim (Reta) Phillips, sister-in-law of the groom, and Bonnie Baker, friend of the bride. They were gowned identically in long empire-waisted gowns of sheer sonja coloured floral georgette with spaghetti straps and sheer jackets. They wore wide picture hats of an off-white colour and carried nosegays of sonja roses surrounded by white daisies. The two junior bridesmaids, Erin Sexsmith, cousin of the bride and Lorilee Phillips, niece of the groom and flower girl Cathy Ann Watson, niece of the bride, were dressed alike in long flowing skirts, frilled neckline, long sleeves and matching sash dresses of the same material as the bridesmaids'. They carried similar nosegays and the flower girl had a white basket of similar flowers.

The groom wore a beige tuxedo trimmed with brown and a sonja tinted carnation boutonniere. His attendants were groomsman Martin Phillips and ushers Rod and Jim Phillips, all brothers of the groom. Michael Phillips, nephew of the groom, was ringbearer and carried a lace-covered pillow. They all wore beige tuxedo jackets, darker beige vests and trousers and white carnation boutonnieres.

The reception was held at the Anglican Church Hall in Madoc. The mother of the bride received her guests in a green floral georgette gown with a white orchid corsage. She was assisted by the groom's mother in a peach polyester gown with a white orchid corsage. Martin Phillips acted as master of ceremonies. A wedding dance followed the reception.

For their wedding trip to Northern Ontario the bride wore a red and white suit, red accessories, and a corsage of red roses. The groom wore a grey wool three piece suit and a red rose boutonniere. Out of town guests attended from Belleville, Sarnia, Oil City, London, Komoka, Walkerton, Owen Sound, Dundalk, Flesherton, Kilsburg, and Toronto.

African Lion Safari. However, after his father's death Mr. Whetham became a cattle buyer, a job he held for 60 years. The 1908 graduate who still lives in his own home is a regular guest at alumni events at OAC.

After the Second World War many more graduates began to take jobs in agriculture-related industry, a trend which has continued to accelerate. "We have industry standing at our doorstep," Prof. Stoskopf says. "As the seed, fertilizer and machine industries have grown, technicians have been increasingly needed...and these industries like diploma graduates."

The program has changed markedly over the years in response to the needs of a changing society and a fluctuating economy. Academic standards have been upgraded to the current Grade 12 requirement, although many students come into the course with Grade 13. Students now have four options from which to choose - agribusiness, agricultural mechanics, farm operators and managers, and horticulture. All options involve field studies courses which take students to farms and industries all over southern Ontario.

Prof. Stoskopf considers field studies a very important component of the program.

Application for Amendment to the Official Plan for the Hastings County Planning Area is being considered by the Hastings County Planning Board. The application proposes:

To amend the Policy Section of the Official Plan as contained in Section 3.10.c "PRIME AGRICULTURAL AND FORESTRY LANDS" and particularly Subsection (vii) "DELINEATION OF PRIME AGRICULTURAL LAND". The purpose of the Amendment is to notify the requirements for use of more detailed soil capability mapping with the municipal Zoning By-laws. The Subsection now reads:

"3.10.c (vii) Delineation of Prime Agricultural Land

In the absence of detailed soil and soil capability mapping, the boundaries of the Prime Agricultural Land as shown on Schedule "A" shall be used as guides for the provisions of the Implementing Restricted Area By-laws."

The Amendment proposes to replace this wording with the following:

"3.10.c (vii) Delineation of Prime Agricultural Land

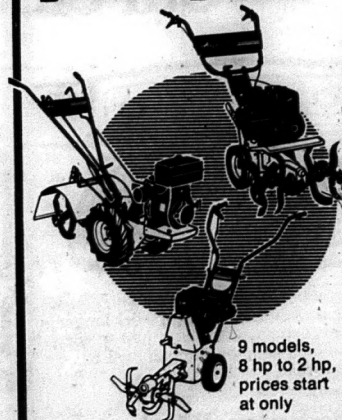

In the absence of more detailed soil and soil capability mapping, the boundaries of the Prime Agricultural Land as shown on Schedule "A" will be used as the basis for the Implementing Restricted Area By-laws. However, as more detailed mapping becomes available, it shall be the policy of this Plan to use such mapping as the basis for the implementing by-laws without amendment to this Plan. Further, at such time as detailed mapping is available for the entire Planning Area a general amendment to Schedule "A" shall be prepared to reflect this information."

The Planning Board has appointed the hour of 10:00 a.m. on Wednesday, September 3, 1980 in Room 102 of the County Administration Buildings, Pinnacle Street, Belleville, Ontario to allow representations to be made concerning the disposition of the proposed Amendment.

For further information, contact Mr. C.E. Bateman, A.M.C.T., Secretary-Treasurer of the County Planning Board, at the County Administration Buildings.

Associate diploma course

These visits help students understand the problems of farmers, industry and the buying public. "As a producer, the farmer needs to know what consumers demand," he points out.

Another change in the program has been its growing appeal for women. This year it is expected that 38 of the freshman class of 220 will be female. In two years these graduates will go to a mixture of jobs in industry and on farms. Prof. Stoskopf points out that although women have gained considerable acceptance on the farm in the last 10 to 15 years, particularly in dairy and swine operations, this was not always the case.

Jane Waterhouse, who came to Canada from England early in the war, is an example of the earlier breed of female graduates. A 16-year-old whose schooling had been interrupted by the war, she enrolled in the diploma program in 1940 and was, as far as she knows, the first woman to do so.

"I took animal husbandry in my second year because that's what I was particularly interested in," she says. "Although it was some time before the head of the department would sign my option card as he was of the opinion that it would be far better for all concerned if I took horticulture instead."

However, Jane, now Mrs. Balfour Melville of East Lothian in Scotland, says, "after I gained my diploma he offered me a job... though he swore I would be the last as well as the first."

The diploma course has been the launching point for many careers other than farming. For Murray Gaunt and John Wise, former Conservative federal agriculture minister, it paved the way to politics. For other graduates the course was the starting point for careers in business.

diplomacy and journalism.

The program has also awakened many farmers to needs in their own communities. Gordon Bothwell, Owen Sound beef farmer who has devoted many hours to community service since his graduation in 1939, says "It made me more aware of the necessity of taking part in community affairs, of trying to make this old world a better place to live."

Neal Stoskopf agrees. "We should be concerned that our graduates have the tools to farm, but also that they can take their places as good citizens of the community with an interest in the world situation."

Look who's stealing your electricity.

A stove exhaust fan filter clogged with grease and grime makes the fan motor work longer and harder to draw air through. Just soaking the filter in mild soap or detergent will fix this energy waster.

Use Energy Wisely

Tune-up, clean up. It's simple. Appliances that are clean and well-cared for last longer and use less electricity. Over the long run, you can save money on appliance replacement. And of course, the less energy you waste, the more dollars you save.

Grease and burnt-on food really reduce your oven's efficiency. A clean oven works better and uses less electricity. Opening the oven door too often also wastes valuable heat. If you have a window in the oven door, keeping it see-through clean can clear up the problem.

Don't waste your energy.

Cottager's Assoc on last legs

The Moira Lake Cottagers' Association may be going down for the third time. The association will be holding "one last meeting" on Saturday, August 23, to see if there's enough interest to keep the body going.

According to a flyer sent out on the Moira Cottagers for Clean Water letterhead, a meeting held July 5 was supposed to be the annual meeting to elect officers, but a decidedly unlucky 13 people turned out and they decided that that wasn't enough to elect an executive.

The flyer urges people to come out to this Saturday's meeting at the Kiwanis Centre at 10 a.m. It cites the cottagers' association involvement in local environmental issues and other activities.

Although the names of the M.C. for C.W. executive appear on the letterhead, the flyer is not signed. The Review was unable to reach anyone in connection with the meeting.

A small community has a big success on its hands

The Buckhorn Wildlife Art Festival

"It's the only show I exhibit at. It's where I get my prime exposure," says sculptor W.A. Eakins. Eakins, one of the best known bird and animal sculptors in the world, is talking not of a New York or Toronto Art Show. He's not even referring to his home city of Peterborough. No, the subject of his enthusiasm is the Buckhorn Wildlife Art Festival and Sale in the tiny community of Buckhorn, northeast of Peterborough.

"It's very good exposure. We get people here from all over, tourists and visitors. I sell a fair bit and I get orders. It's good because they've kept the junk out - there's no candy floss and that sort of thing. And it's big; it gets bigger every year," Mr. Eakins continues.

And in fact Buckhorn, a hamlet of around 300 people - has discovered the pot of gold that every small community looks for - the event that has put them on the map and brought lots of tourists, money and recognition to the community.

Last year for instance, the festival attracted 12,000 people to view AND spend money - According to this year's handbook they bought $61,000 worth of art. Through that admission ($1.25 a head and 50 cents for kids this year, last year it was a dollar) by skimming 20 per cent from each sale, and from food and drink sales the Festival netted $12,000. And then of course there's all the business that 12,000 tourists will bring to the town in a weekend.

The Buckhorn Wildlife Art Festival and Sale is, to put it mildly, a success.

How did it happen? Well, as usual necessity was the mother of invention. "We were looking for a way to raise the mortgage money on our community centre. (Local wildlife artists) Edwin Matthews came up with this idea and..." says Eric Hilton, Treasurer for the community centre.

And the idea took off. That they obviously had the right time doesn't need to be said. But you don't have to look far at the show itself to see why it's so popular with the people who come to see it and why more and more people come to see it every year (8,000 in 1978, 12,000 last year, they're aiming for 16,000 this year).

First of all, as the publicity for the show tells you, as almost every exhibitor testifies as the organizers themselves point out, there is only the best wildlife art here. Glen Loates, Michael Dumas, J. Sharkey Thomas, Keirstead, Roger Tory Peterson, all are represented here among the 86 artists taking place. And while these are among the best known, even the names you don't recognize - there are a few newcomers here, quite a few locals without big reputations - everything you see is up to the high standard the festival boasts.

But there is more to offer than a lot of good paintings. There is, in spite of the limitations of the wildlife theme, an almost infinite range of techniques and styles plus several different mediums - sculpture, ceramics, fretwork (the use of different kinds of wood to create the picture), metal fabric, leather and even realistic rock cats. It seems that anyone with any feeling or liking for nature or art could easily spend a couple of hours just looking and admiring.

But an added attraction is that most of the artists are there for you to talk with; they're eager to discuss their work and glad to take pains to explain how it's done and why and give tips. We spent time talking to three or four artists and found everyone more than friendly - as were, needless to say the people running the show.

Finally all these factors put together give the impression of a big, artistic carnival - the crowds, the friendliness and the beauty all around and in so many forms and styles is breathtaking.

Of course all this is based on the growing attraction of wildlife art for the public, something that is probably connected to the increased environmental awareness that has developed in the past decade. Once limited to museums and children's books, natural art now represents - besides good art a medium for people to demonstrate, a greater concern for the earth and the natural life around us.

It was appropriate then that in addition to the various art exhibits was one of live endangered animals. These belong to Bill Valliere, and his purpose in having them on display was to raise the $250.00 needed to move them from his pet store in Toronto to an endangered wildlife sanctuary north of the city.

An interesting aspect of the show - and a surprising one to me - was that the art wasn't all out of the range of the average pocketbook. While there were works there for $3,000 and upwards, some of the mass-produced stuff - Keirstead for instance - could be got, framed, for as cheaply as $25.00 I doubt that there were very many bargains - it seemed that prices were what one would normally see in a gallery - but at the same time probably the accessibility of so much good work at once obviously encourages a lot of spending; and, as one artist remarked too, it often generates orders for further work.

All this seems to have been accomplished by a lot of hard work on the part of a few people - the Buckhorn Community Centre has a membership of only 57 families - and according to one organizer at least, to have been done in spite of, rather than with the co-operation of the community as a whole. "There's very little local interest. Getting volunteers is like pulling teeth; and more than 80 per cent of the people who come in are tourists."

(This probably sounds very familiar to anyone who has tried to organize anything anywhere. However in Buckhorn it has an added twist. It seems there are two community centres within a few miles - the other is in Lakehurst and neither community has more than 500 people. Interestingly enough, according to my informant anyway, the two community centres - or rather the groups behind the two centres are at odds, mainly because one group is dry and the other, Buckhorn, wet. Life is never dull.)

However whatever the local politics, Buckhorn has found a winner, something to stir the envy of all the other local municipalities and certainly something for anyone within travelling distance should make a real point of attending.

ONE FOOT IN THE FURROW

BY BOB TROTTER

A tale of a dog

A couple of readers have written to inquire about old Jake, the dog we had for so many years. Perhaps they missed the column where Jake's demise was chronicled.

I am reminded of him because we were asked to be dog-sitters for a few days this summer and the presence of another dog around the house prompted us to think about Jake.

He came to us as a black-and-tan-and-white handful of fluff from a litter of farm dogs. We had tried to raise four or five puppies before Jake arrived. I love beagles but we did not have much luck with them. We tried other breeds but they did not survive. We began to think we were jinxed. We had horses, rabbits, baby chicks, even raccoons. They all survived, even to the point where they became nuisances, some of them.

We had a hamster that lived almost 10 years, yet they are supposed to succumb to the ravages of time in five to eight years.

Then along came Jake.

No purebred, he. He looked as though he should have royal blood in him but he was a Heinz 57 varieties. With his soulful eyes, floppy ears and great plume of a tail, he was the lord of all he surveyed. Our property was his domain.

He was an established member of our family when our youngest daughter was born and he took a proprietary interest in her. She could maul him unmercifully and he took it for hours. When he got tired, he walked away with dignity and found a place where she could not reach him. Anyone else, though, would be warned with a low rumble if they disturbed his dignity.

He was justifiably proud of his tail. Nobody could touch it except a child.

Jake travelled many thousands of miles with us. We could not leave him behind when we went away. He went to Cape Cod. He went to Saskatchewan. He enjoyed every family outing until the last few months of his long, almost 20-year lifespan.

He always enjoyed opening presents at birthdays and, especially at Christmas. One year, he disappeared after the presents were opened and came back with a beautiful silk scarf and presented it to me with a swinging tail and his head cocked to one side.

I wore it for years. We inquired around him. He would gaze steadily at you for a while and those beautiful brown eyes would be saying: I love to be here with you.

The last couple of years he was with us, he did this more often as though saying he would soon be leaving but do not forget.

When he was about 18 years old, his hearing started to fail. A few months later, his eyes got dimmer, then his rear end gave out. We thought we would have to put him away but he recovered with some loving help from my wife and daughters. They exercised him around our big backyard with a towel around his middle to hold him steady. He recovered for a time.

He was an epileptic, too, but more intelligent than almost any other animal I have ever known. Which is more proof that epilepsy should not be considered a disease but simply as an affliction.

We missed Jake when he finally gave in to old age. His last weeks were spent on the rug by the back door. He was almost immobile in body but alert in his mind right to the end.

We like our visiting dog, mind you. But she is not and never can be Jake. She is a good dog, pathetically eager to please, a fawning, gurgling hound who takes huge leaps around the family room knocking anything and everything aside in her urge to find favor. She barks at every sound, real or imagined.

But we'll be happy to send her stumbling back home again. The experience has increased our determination not to get another dog.

There could never be another like Jake, the neighborhood but no one claimed it. I'm positive he did not steal it. I believe he bought it with his own money.

He was a smart dog, a mongrel genius. If, now and again, Jake came and placed his muzzle on your knee, you had to notice

Edgar Schiller

.. Believe it or not, everything you see here is natural untreated wood. This is fretwork and Schiller uses different kinds of wood to depict what he sees in nature around him. Born in Germany, Schiller now lives in Peterborough. He says that his work is beginning to gain acceptance and hopes he will be able to make a living off it soon.

Keena

.. Keena is a Mohawk artist and is connected with the well-known Whetung Gallery. Her Indian figurines she considers individual entities, possessing feelings with all the joys and sorrows associated with life.

WILDLIFE ART

W.A. Eakins

.. Eakins is a bird and animal sculptor of international reputation with his works gracing collections all over the world. He works from live birds, pictures that he takes himself and skins he gets on loan from the Royal Ontario Museum. His emphasis is on realism; his attempt is to make the birds as natural as possible and much of his work is done to size.

Paul Gergahty

.. This work by Gergahty, also shown in the first page, is only one aspect of a many-talented man. Gergahty works for the ROM in designing biological displays and has just finished a diorama (3-D display) for the Pt. Pelee Park. His on-the-spot wildlife sketches were one of the highlights of the Buckhorn show.

EDITOR'S VIEWPOINT

Thank your

It's been one of those years! We read daily reports in the newspapers of major catastrophes around the world. There have been several eruptions of Mount St. Helen's and the extended drought in the United States and Western Canada. Hurricanes, earthquakes, coups and wars are part of the everyday life of many of the earth's inhabitants. And, as the days, weeks and months of 1980 continue to unfold, there doesn't seem to be an end in sight. In the history books of the future, 1980 will be looked on as a year of crisis, both natural and man-made, and we're only two thirds of the way through the year. What surprises do mother nature and fate still hold for us in the remaining four months of this year? Can it get any worse? Yes, in many parts of the world it can and will get worse. Unfortunately, those of us in Southern Ontario have a habit of looking on the events of other parts of the country and the world in a detached manner. After all, it's their problem, not ours. Don't we have enough to worry about, what with rising food prices, layoffs and all the other little problems involved with just living on this earth? Tourism is down (in this area at least), our unemployment rate continues to rise and we are in what is generally acknowledged as a depressed area. Aren't those problems enough for us to worry about without taking other people's problems too seriously?

Our problems certainly are serious and we do have lots to keep us busy for the next few months. But I think that, all in all, we can thank our lucky stars that we are in an area that hasn't yet been called on to face the many major problems that will eventually become our lot. Unemployment

Government advertising

To The Editor:

Have you noticed the growing number of ads on television, which you the taxpayer, have paid for? The pro-constitutional campaign to soften us up for unilateral action by the Federal Government, or the environmental series paid for by the Provincial taxpayers (not mentioning the continual refusal by Inco to meet year-old pollution control orders), or the Preserve it. Conserve it campaign (read Progressive Conservative). All of these ads cost millions of dollars. Ontario Hydro's advertising budget alone is reputed to be 10 million dollars this year.

Consider this situation: Hydro's mandate is to provide electricity at the lowest cost. Even Mr. McCauley admits that hydraulic is less expensive than nuclear, and yet the hydraulic department of Ontario Hydro found its budget slashed to 1.2 million dollars this year compared with 10 million dollars for advertising! One ad states that "nuclear power frees us from the high cost of imported energy", yet Ontario taxpayers are currently paying 40 per cent more for their own uranium than the present world price, and should those world prices rise dramatically as they did in the past (400 per cent in months) we will be forced to pay those same high rates for our own fuel. So, I ask, how are we freed from those high imported energy costs?

To me, the frightening aspect of this trend toward propaganda by government departments is the substitution of advertising for action. In each case what we really need is action, not "Madison Avenue" propaganda.

lucky stars

is a serious problem for those looking for jobs, the fact that tourism is down in this area is a serious problem and does affect more of us than we realize and industry and our governments do seem to have forgotten about this area, but we're still in much better shape than many other places and people in this world. Whether we know it or not, we are being given the chance to see our future and possibly take steps to alter that future, if we have the foresight and ingenuity to try.

Here in southern Ontario, we haven't faced evacuation from forest fires, we definitely haven't had a prolonged drought and we haven't had an earthquake, a volcanic eruption or a hurricane destroying our housing and crops. True, we eventually will suffer the effects of some of these natural disasters in a roundabout way but our suffering will be minimal compared to those who have managed to live through the actual disasters. For that reason alone, we should thank our lucky stars but, at the same time, we should realize that we have been lucky so far and that our time will eventually come.

Our luck started last winter when we had one of the mildest winters in our recent history. It continued through the spring and summer. Late frost and very early hot spells in the spring seemed to be foretelling a very serious problem for this area. Those trends were shortlived and now, with the summer winding down, we find that many of our crops are as good as or better than previous years. So far, we have generally had a minimum of damage to them and we've got enough rain to almost ensure no serious problems in the near future.

But again, we must express cautious optimism. While our crops are good, the crops in other regions have not fared so well. Don't expect your prices in this area to be down because we had a good year. Our farmers will still be looking to make the best deal they can and that will probably mean selling their crops at premium prices to other areas of Canada and the U.S. While they're insisting on premium prices for our crops, the countries we rely on for fruit and vegetables, coffee and sugar, will also be asking premium prices for their crops. So, while we have missed the effects of these major disasters to this point, we're about to start paying the price. It will be a tough winter, especially if we get the cold and snow we didn't get last year. Oil and gas prices won't be as cheap as last year. Food prices won't be as cheap as last year. On the other hand, salaries may be up, slightly.

But still, we're not as unlucky as some. We're going to pay the higher prices and maybe have to do without some luxuries to get through the winter, but we're not facing rebuilding new homes, making new loans at the bank on farms that didn't produce crops this year plus paying the higher prices. We have been lucky. It may not continue through the winter, but we're still several steps behind many other areas on the road to a major recession and we should be preparing ourselves to catch up. Our turn will come and we can cushion the blow if we start to conserve what we have now for the tough times to come this fall and winter. We're in the driver's seat right now we can apply the break or accelerate our way into the recession as quickly or as slowly as we wish. We've got the choice right now, tomorrow that choice may be taken away from us.

NOEL'S NOTES

BY NOEL STOCKTON

I happened to see the movie The Godfather again the other night and it reminded me of my famous sergeant, the one who made the big time with the mafia boys in Italy.

It was during our stay around Naples that he really came into prominence, and I can't tell you his real name because he may still be somewhere around, although undoubtedly incarcerated, and he might take a very jaundiced and legal view of my blazoning his infamous story across the continent.

But this is the way it went.

After we made that ill-fated landing at Salerno we were scrapping in and around Naples for what seemed like an eternity, and the sergeant had plenty of opportunities to make a lucrative contact with certain card-carrying members of the local mafia.

This was quite understandable because he had been engaged in many a nefarious enterprise in his natural habitat before he was shuffled into the army and, by his own telling, had encountered and triumphed in a variety of sporting jousts with the local constabulary, with the result that the purveyors of the law, in any shape or form, did not hold the same volume of terror for him as they would for normal, law-abiding citizens like you and me.

Thus it was only a matter of a short period of time before he managed to make a successful liaison with the bad boys of Napoli, and he immediately and wholeheartedly engaged in an illicit grain running operation for the Black Market merchants of the city, with the use of War Department vehicles and equipment.

At that time, you understand, there was no transport available to the civilian population to convey the much needed grain from the country districts into the city, so our crafty sergeant quickly pressed into service the hundred or so three ton trucks under his jurisdiction. He would take out so many of them each night, having paid off the drivers beforehand, load up the transport with the grain in the country and proceed back to the main square in Naples, where he and his cohorts would leave the loaded vehicles in a pre-arranged spot for an hour or more, while he and his drivers dallied over a flagon or two of vino rosso in a neighbouring hostelry.

After that they would pick up the empty trucks and return them, just hasty to the camp so they could be used for the purpose for which they had been originally provided.

You can't change

All very simple, you see, and the money, in literally thousands of liri, just rolled in like lava from the appreciative and enthusiastic mafia.

And this went on so long, undiscovered, that the sergeant amassed a goodly, personal fortune of a size and value that could be legally termed as a potful.

Unfortunately for him there was no way that an Allied Army sergeant could trot calmly into the Banco di Napoli in the Piazza Garibaldi, doff his cap to the nearest charming teller and proceed to deposit a few million liri in a cool and casual manner, without expecting to elevate the odd eyebrow and generate a series of terse, harsh enquiries.

So he was faced with this financial dilemma which caused him no little embarrassment, as he sat cross-legged in his tent, into the early hours, groping within his limited brainbox for some solution as to how his ill-gotten gains were to be disposed, without landing him in the clink.

By this time, also, his kit-bag was stuffed to the gunwales with the filthy lucre, and had taken on the semblance of the large, shiny sausage, with colourful coin of the realm protruding in all the oddest places. There was nowhere he could carry his kit because his haversack too was crammed to the railings with crinkly paper.

What then was he to do?

As you might well imagine our hero was not to be left in a state of frustration for any extended period of time, and it was only a matter of a few seconds before the solution rose from the floor of the tent and struck him a resounding blow between the right and the left ears.

What you haven't got

In a nearby village resided a most desirable and shapely senorina of fairly noble parentage, who was in no way short-changed by nature's cash register, and upon whom the cavalier charm of this handsome sergeant had already been partially bestowed, not without a certain encouraging response; mainly on account of the sizeable bank roll that was at this very moment skulking around the countryside in a frantic search for some cozy spot to rest its weary head.

The ensuing courtship was of a fairly frantic nature, frenzied and whirlwind on the part of the desperate groom, and somewhat more relaxed on the part of the conniving bride. The illicit fortune briskly found its way into the vault of the Banco di Napoli in the name of the bountiful senorina, and the ensuing nuptials were thereupon discussed in true Italian style with the bride and her three husky brothers all romantically eager to see the thing done well and truly in the best mafia traditions.

There was, however, one small obstacle. Permission for the union would have to be sought of his commanding officer, and this was the one detail the cunning sergeant had so far neglected to observe, possibly being conscious only of the pressing need of the hasty betrothal, for now that the money was safely stashed away in the name of the bride-to-be and her enormous brothers, the fortune would be lost forever to the handsome, smiling sergeant, unless the painless operation could be finalized as quickly as possible, as there was always a very real danger that the booty would be liquidated in jig time unless he could engineer some binding contract that would keep it constantly under his personal supervision.

But the commanding officer was not as flexible as he might have been in this affair, and demonstrated an unnerving interest in the respective, varying religious learnings of the two parties, a condition which had not even remotely presented itself to the frantic groom.

The senorina, of course, was of the Catholic faith, and the sergeant was of some obscure, demoninational origin that had managed to get itself thoroughly lost somewhere in the thirteenth century.

Nevertheless, nothing daunted, he presented himself at the company office bright and early with the following request:

Sir, I would like to change my religion.

From what to what? I asked in some surprise.

To Roman Catholic, he replied, after giving it a few seconds' thought while he struggled with his powers of recollection to discover what his prospective bride actually professed in the way of religion.

So I told him I would make arrangements for him to meet the R.C. padre on his next visit, and away he skipped rejoicing openly.

I sent the message asking the chaplain if he would be kind enough to call when he was next in the vicinity, as I had a request from a sergeant who wished to embrace the Catholic faith.

He arrived the same afternoon.

I should perhaps explain at this point that we had the most ecumenical assortment of soldiery in our outfit as far as religion was concerned.

When the Anglican minister was about to hold a church parade, we would call out "Fall Out The Anglicans!!!" and everybody in the damn camp was suddenly a Roman Catholic. Then when the R.C. padre showed up "we'd shout "Fall Out The R.C.s!!" and overnight they'd all become devout Protestants.

However, when the priest came that day I sent for the sergeant.

I understand, said the priest to the sergeant, that you wish to become a Catholic.

Yessir, indeed, says the sergeant brightly, glowing with a profound, ethereal righteousness, standing smartly to attention and snapping off a salute like a karate chop.

Very well then, says the padre, have you brought your bible with you?

Bible, says the sergeant weakly, in a bit of a daze.

Yes sergeant, your Bible, says the priest.

Very good sir, says the resourceful sergeant as, with a minimum of hesitation Continued on page 10-A while he racked his brains for some memory of what a Bible actually looked like, he fled off in a frantic haste all over the camp from tent to tent and bivouac to bivouac, lifting flaps and calling urgently to his men.

Anybody got a Bible?

Got what?

A Bible, dummy, anybody got a Bible?

And so it went until by a stroke of luck he happened to come across the corporal cook who was taking a quiet snooze while the dinner was burning.

The corporal cook remembered having received a Bible from his mother for his 21st birthday three years ago, and after scrambling about in his kit-bag for an interminable period, he eventually exposed it to the air. He carefully removed the cellophane wrapping and tried to separate the pages a bit before handing it over.

Then he came straight to the company office to tell me that the sergeant must have been out in the hot sun without his shirt on, and flipped his helmet because he'd just been and asked him for the loan of a BIBLE!

After that I left the company office to the two of them, believing it to be a personal matter between the sergeant and the padre.

When I arrived back there some little time later I found the chaplain alone, and I have to confess he appeared to be in a state of bewildered apprehension, for he was leaning against my desk, deathly pale all over, and wearing an expression of complete and utter disbelief.

Full of innocent concern, I asked what had happened.

Did you say said he in reply, rolling his eyes in all directions, did you say, said he, neatly folding his arms and fixing me with a gaze as though he were fixing his bayonet, did you say, quoth he that your perishing sergeant wanted to change his religion?

That, said I with a frigid feeling of futile failure, was the big idea.

Then I have the pleasure to inform you, said he, softly and quietly in the manner of a kindly head doctor humoring his most difficult subject, may I have the delightful experience of telling you, said he dryly, may I just simply inform you of this fact.

YOUR PRECIOUS SERGEANT DOESN'T HAVE ANY RELIGION TO CHANGE!

Buying a house (I)

Entering the world of house-buying is like plunging into a foreign land for most first-time buyers.

There is a whole new language to master. You deal with lawyers and brokers, builders and bankers. If you're unprepared you're likely to become lost and the result could be unexpected financial loss and emotional frustration.

The first question you should ask yourself when you have decided to shop around is: "What can I afford to pay?"

Over the years, mortgage lenders have developed a few rules-of-thumb to help you decide how much you can afford. Here are three:

- The selling price should be no more than three and one-half times your annual net (after taxes) income. If you are buying the house with another person who makes a stable income add both salaries to make the calculation;

- The experts also say your monthly mortgage payments and one-twelfth of your annual municipal tax should be no more than 30 per cent of your monthly gross (before taxes) salary. For example, if you earn $1,500 a month, your mortgage payments plus taxes should be $450 a month or less. If you earn $2,000, payments should be no more than $600;

- Lastly, your mortgage payments plus other debts should not total more than 40 per cent of your monthly gross income.

Now that you've decided what you can afford, the next step is to decide where you would like to live. That should encompass a variety of considerations.

The most convenient neighborhood is one that is close to public transportation, schools, churches and shopping. It is also helpful if it is close to your work, unless you enjoy daily commuting.

It is equally important to find out whether municipal services - like garbage pickup and police patrols - are regular and efficient. Someone who lives in the neighborhood can be a good source of such information.

A wise precaution for all homeowners is to find out whether the municipal zoning in the area is compatible with the kind of neighborhood you want to live in. It is possible that the lovely sunshine streaming into the kitchen window could be blocked by a 20-storey highrise in the future if the zoning allowed for it. Call the local municipal offices to get this information.

It is also a good idea to visit the neighborhood during the day and the night to see if you feel comfortable at both times.

This is the first of a five-part series excerpted from the Ontario Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations booklet "So you want to buy a house!"

To obtain a free copy of the booklet write: Consumer Information Centre, Ontario Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, 55 Yonge St., Toronto M7A 2H6. Telephone (416) 963-1111. Collect calls accepted.

WOODS, WATER, WILDLIFE

BY RON REID

Stopping the rock painters

Bobby Voland, wherever you are, you had better keep your head low! And Tom, and Harry, and Jean, and all your other friends too! For Bobby and his cohorts spend their spare time engaged in a particularly irritating form of vandalism - painting their names on roadside rocks.

This deliberate marring of the landscape has been a problem for years along rock cuts in major highways through cottage country, such as Highway 69. But the plague is spreading - over the past two years the craggy limestone cliffs of the Bruce Peninsula have begun to be littered with this multicoloured graffiti too. Even in the wilds along the Spanish River, accessible only by boat, a magnificent rock face is crowned by residues from "Pat and Mike".

What kind of psychological quirk motivates these modern-day rock-painters? Is it their suppressed nastiness, determined to inflict their frustrations on the rest of society by defacing anything of beauty? Or perhaps a way of conquering the wilderness by making your mark, like a wolf staking out his territory by peeing on the bushes? Maybe it's just good old-fashioned competition, American-style, to see who can scale the highest cliff or vandalize in the brightest hues.

The psychologists are welcome to speculate on these hypothetical causes at length. But the solutions, if there are any, are likely to be more pragmatic. The Ministry of Transportation at least tries to remove the symptoms, by painting them over in a neutral colour, but that's an uphill battle. In California, a proposed law would restrict the sale of cans of spray paint to anyone under 18, in an attempt to curb their graffiti explosion.

But if you catch anyone in the act, your choices are more limited. You could call the police to lay charges, or perhaps follow the lead of one of my acquaintances, who supervised while the youthful offenders removed their handiwork with wire brushes. Her cure may not have been pleasant, but I suspect it cured permanently the desire of these young vandals for any more rock painting!

Microwave Hints

What's Cooking? BROCCOLI

Frozen: Empty into glass casserole contents of a 10 or 12 oz. package of frozen broccoli. Add butter or margarine and desired seasonings. Use seasoned salt in place of iodized salt, as iodized salt tends to dehydrate vegetables. Cover with plastic wrap and cook 7 to 8 minutes on "High", stirring occasionally. Fresh: Wash fresh broccoli thoroughly. Trim and cut off flowerettes from main stalk. Cook in the water that remains on vegetable. It is not necessary to add more water. For 1 1/2 lbs. cover and cook 11-12 minutes on "High". Add butter, seasonings and serve.

MEMORIALS

WOOD, Alice - In loving memory of a dear mother and grandmother who passed away Aug. 23, 1973.
She suffered much in silence.

And fought so hard to stay:
With farewells unspoken,
She quietly slept away,
She faced the pain with courage.

When a cure was not to be:
God the helper of the helpless, Saw her pain and gave her peace.
Loving remembered by Vivian, Don and family.

MEMORIALS

WOOD, Alice - In loving memory of a dear mother
and grandmother who passed away Aug. 23, 1973.
How patient in thy suffering:
When no hand could give thee ease:
God, the helper of the helpless:
Saw thy pain and gave thee
peace.
Always remembered by Wanda, Mitch and sons.

BRINSON, Daniel - In loving memory of a dear father and grandfather who passed away Aug. 23, 1979.
His will he will suffer no more.

In the loved land of the best, Pain faded as he tread heaven's shore:
It left him at peace and rest.
Always remembered by Marcella, Crofton, Carey,
Michelle and Richard.

WOOD, Alice - In loving memory of a dear mother
and grandmother who passed away Aug. 23, 1973.
Sweet memories will linger forever:
Time cannot change them,
Its true:
Years that may come cannot sever:
My loving remembrance of you.

Always remembered by Marcella, Crofton, Carey,
Michelle and Richard.

JOHN Schach - In loving memory of a dear husband, father & grandfather.
Ever remembered
Ever loved.
Wife Mary & family.

WICKLE Albert - In loving memory of a dear father who passed away Aug. 23, 1972.
He left us quietly, his thoughts unknown.
But left us a memory. We are proud to own.
So treasure him, Lord, in your garden of rest.
For when on earth, He was one of the best.
Always remembered by son
Grant & wife Nettie.

WIDDOWS - In loving memory of my dear husband, George I. Widdows who passed away Aug. 17, 1978.
Always remembered, always loved.

Chamber of Commerce Meeting to be held on Sept. 4th to introduce Greeting Cart

The newest Chamber of Commerce project is designed to help introduce newcomers to the village of Madoc and vice versa. The project has been spearheaded by Doug Pigden and is scheduled to go into effect on the 1st of September. The program is similar to the "Welcome Wagon" service offered in many larger communities and will mean that newcomers into the village will be paid a visit by a local resident, Mrs. Aileen Pigden, who will welcome them to the community and give them information about local services or answer any questions they might have about the community.

The Greeting Cart project was given unanimous support of the Chamber Executive at their regular monthly meeting held on Thursday and will be implemented on September 1st. However, because the project needs the support of local and area merchants to be a total success, a meeting will be held at the Madoc Town Hall on September 4th at which time the project will be explained to merchants and retailers of the community. This will be an open meeting that any interested person or persons are invited to attend with the meeting scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m. While the project is scheduled to begin in Madoc, Doug Pigden adds that, with the full co-operation of the merchants, this project could be extended into the townships in the very near future.

Each merchant or retailer who joins the Greeting Cart group will be asked to pay $10 for the remaining four months of this year and in return will receive cards from the Chamber of Commerce to be sent to new residents in the village and eventually, the outlying areas. The cards will serve a two fold purpose. They will be first and foremost a greeting card with the store or retailer's name rubber stamped on the top of the card by the merchant or retailer. But the merchants will also be asked to use these cards as a gift certificate or discount cards in which they would give the new residents discount prices when they visited the merchants store. Besides the card itself, Mrs. Pigden would pay the new arrivals a personal visit and welcome them to the community. She would bring with her a package of material concerning the village that would include the cards, a map of the village including the names of the streets and the location of the various churches within the village. Also included in the package would be a welcoming letter from the Reeve which would include some general information about the village and then, last but not least, a general information sheet would be given to the new resident. This fact sheet would include such things as garbage pick-up dates, the numbers of our two local doctors and dentist, the number to call for a medical emergency, the O.P.P. and the fire number and will also advise the new residents about our local cable television service that also lists activities in the community.

This fact sheet was the main reason for the implementation of the Greeting Cart program. Earlier in the year, it was brought to the Chamber's attention that new residents within the village and surrounding areas often had a great deal of difficulty in knowing who to contact to find out pertinent information regarding essential services. If the project is supported by the merchants and does expand into the outlying townships, the Reeve of each of the communities would include a welcoming letter and their merchants would be asked to participate in the program. It should also be added that existing members of the Chamber of Commerce will be given this service with their membership fees each year and that the gifts or discounts will be small. Mr. Pigden stresses that he does not expect the retailers to give away their stores. Another point that Mr. Pigden made was that this project is aimed at newcomers into the village or the outlying areas. "We're not directing this program at people who are moving from one house within the village to another house within the village. We want new people who are unfamiliar to the area to benefit from the program as well as our retail merchants."

"We also want the project to be kept relatively simple but, if any club or organization would like to include their own fact sheet in our material, they have only to make up such a sheet and contact me or my wife at 473-2400 or mail it to Doug Pigden, Box 280, Madoc, Ontario. And, if people know of someone we have missed for one reason or another, we would appreciate a call from them. We'll try to cover all of the bases ourselves, but we could conceivably miss someone and, if we do, we would like to know about it. We don't want to leave anyone out. People can also call us if they need any further information about the project, but we would prefer if they would attend the meeting on September 4th at 7:30 p.m. at the town hall so we can answer all of the questions at the same time."

Hoard's even series with Minutemen, next game finishes one team

Madoc Minutemen were three outs from being in the semi-finals last Monday night. However, it wasn't to be as they lost to Hoards' 3-2 in the second game of their three-game quarter final. The series now stands at one game a piece.

Robert Nickle opened the first inning with a single to centre, stole second base, went to third on a ground out and stole home on a passed ball. This run held up until Hoard's sixth inning when Frank Bailey walked and two singles later was moved to third base. He scored on a sacrifice fly to tie the score at one each.

Harold Bailey opened the bottom of sixth with a single. This was followed by a single by Charlie Wannamaker. Eric Bailey ran for Harold and with two strikes on Terry Helps he was sent home by his coach on a passed ball. The passed ball however, gave an Argo bounce off the screen providing an easy out for Hoards. With two out Helps drove the ball to left centre for a triple scoring Wannamaker from second. Leading 2-1 the Minutemen went into the top of seventh needing only three outs to win the series.

In the top of seventh Tinney singled to centre and G. Deilor homered down the third base line and Hoards took a 3-2 lead into the bottom of the seventh. In the bottom of the seventh with two out Brian Armstrong drove the ball to deep right centre field for a triple but that was as far as the threat was to go as Hoards managed the third out without further damage.

Pearson and Tinney combined on the mound to give up two runs on nine hits, walked two and struck out eight. Brian Armstrong on the mound for the Minutemen gave up three runs on five hits walked two and struck out two.

It was a tough loss as the team played well defensively. They left nine of their own players on the base paths while Hoards left three.

Game three of this best two out of three series goes this week in Stirling (definite date hasn't been set but probably Tuesday or Wednesday night). The winner will meet either Tweed or the Stirling Pats in the semi-finals while the loser looks forward to next year.

Wolfhounds escort dignitaries at Summer Games

Two Wilderness-Tintara Irish Wolfhounds owned by Mrs. Frances Campbell Rich, of R.R. 3, Madoc, escorted the dignitaries at the opening of the Summer Games in Peterborough last weekend. The dogs, Wilderness-Tintara Ilyr (a male and Canadian Champion) and Wilderness-

Tintara Tiki (a female imported from England) are owned by Mrs. Rich, are boarded at Mr. and Mrs. Dave Hobson's Wilderness Kennels and were handled at the opening ceremonies by Shane Hobson and Robert Sloan.

Cottagers' Association elects new executive

The Moira Cottagers for Clean Water were able to elect their new slate of officers at a meeting at the Kiwanis Centre in Madoc on Saturday 6th, according to new president Charles Noble of Willowdale, the turnout was still not as large as they had hoped.

"While the turnout still wasn't as large as we had hoped, it was an enthusiastic group who attended the meeting and that means that the association will definitely run for another year," said Mr. Noble. "The new executive hopes this we will be able to create new enthusiasm within the association and have the organization well organized by next year. One of our major problems, however, will be to convey to the other cottagers that we still need their support and participation. In that regard, we'll be having a membership drive and appointing zone representatives for closer contact with the cottagers. At present, our membership amounts to only 58 to 60 cottagers out of a possible 290 and we would like to see that number raised

Bowling alley re-opens with a new look

Bowlers at the new Madoc Bowl are in for a real treat the first time they bowl in this new facility because new alleys, new approaches and an automatic pin setting apparatus have really helped to spruce up the lanes. Al and Brian Sharpe, a father and son combination, have worked hard to make the alleys some of the best in the area.

The Madoc Bowling Alley will re-open on Wednesday, August 27th, under new management and with new facilities that will hopefully bring bowling back to Madoc. Al and Brian Sharpe, a father and son combination, will be managing Madoc Bowl this year and they are looking for bowlers from 8 to 108 to form the new leagues which will be starting in the first week in September.

But the Sharpes aren't just hoping that more bowlers will become involved this year, they've done some renovating that should improve the facilities immensely.

The interior of the building has been repainted, new seating and score stands have been installed and the lighting has been improved. Bowlers coming back this year will notice several other major changes as soon as they look at the alleys.
The alleys have been completely resurfaced which should mean even better averages for the bowlers. The approach areas are also brand new as they have been resurfaced with a new material that is not damaged by street shoes, is very durable and is also fireproof. Then, if that isn't enough to attract bowlers, automatic pinsetting machines have been installed in all but two alleys and the balls will be returned automatically. "If the demand warrants it, we'll also convert the remaining two alleys to automatic pinsetting in the near future," said Mr.
Sharpe. "We'll continue to use pinboys for the present but we will convert those lanes if the demand is there."

For those doubters who believe only what they see, the Sharpes will be holding an open house on Wednesday, August 27th, after 6 p.m. and they welcome anyone to come and see the facilities and ask any questions about leagues that they might have. Mr. Sharpe has been in the business for well over twenty-five years as he began setting pins at the age of eleven years. "We'll be open seven days a week with regular hours from 12 noon until midnight, depending on the demand, and with exceptions for reservations. To make reservations, people can call us at home at 473-4772 or if they have any questions about forming leagues, etc.

"We want to stress that we are open for all types of leagues and that we will be open for bowling after Wednesday. As of yet, the pinsetting machines are not hooked up but we anticipate that will be done by Wednesday and we will be ready for business. We're looking for leagues to be established during the days, afternoons and evenings and it doesn't matter if you are eight years old or one hundred and eight years old, we want to have a league for you in our facilities."

Farm work and country life as a road to rehabilitation

BY MARY O'RIORDAN

Memories of childhood are often composed of the more positive experiences of the past. Dominated by the sounds and sensations of happy times, they represent the years which are relatively free from the demands and expectations of a very busy

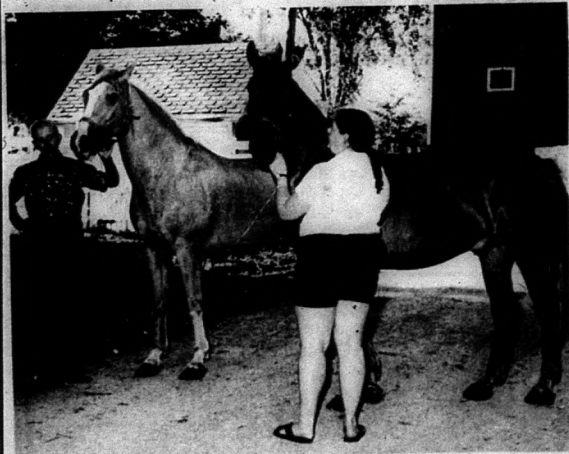

Not fearing the personal battles or legal complications which might have arisen, but wishing to avoid any backlash aimed at their children, the Mitsons began to look for an alternate community.

The area north of Madoc, relatively close to a secondary school and the medical and already creditable record as respected and trusted guardians for adolescents.

The rural setting which the Mitsons have chosen for their home offers certain advantages to their protégés. Far from boring or restricting, the farm is an active and stimulating place to be. The daily knowledge. For the children who have been referred to their care, Mr. and Mrs. Mitson are mom and dad, and the sprawling farm is home. Offering stability and support to their children, the Mitsons have found, is most often the best method for discovering the cause of their problems and uncompromising world. For some children, however, these years will be remembered as turbulent times of conflict and resentment.

Children with emotional or behavioural problems may never look to the past with amusement or nostalgia. Such difficulties, whether they are the products of parental shortcomings or absences, or rooted in the individual himself, cannot be solved merely by condemnation and intolerance. They pose a challenge which can be countered in several ways. In some instances, the best approach involves a placement for the child in a group home. Only recently, several miles north of Madoc, such a home has been established.

For Mr. and Mrs. Mitson, the decision to leave their native Quebec for Ontario involved careful thought and discussion. After resolving to move their group home, their immediate task was to find a suitable location. The area surrounding Roslin was first considered as a tentative choice. Residents of the area soon began to circulate a petition which opposed the couple's plans for settling in that region.

psychiatric opinions so valued by Mrs. Mitson offered a second possibility. Eventually, a farm which met their needs was found and purchased. Last month, Mr. and Mrs. Mitson, along with five of their foster children from Quebec, moved into their new home. The neighbours have been friendly, the schools have shown co-operation, and the members of the family feel that they have been well received by the community.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitson have brought years of experience in the field of social services with them to Madoc. Mrs. Mitson for eleven years worked at Butter's Memorial Institution for retarded children. As supervisor for over five hundred residents, she gained invaluable practical experience and developed a strong sense of compassion and understanding for children with a wide variety of problems. After this the couple established their own group home for emotionally disturbed children, in Magog, a town which lies between Montreal and Sherbrooke. The ten years spent in this town added further to an chores may be repetitive, but assisting at the birth of an animal would present a demanding situation for anyone. Mr. Mitson, a trainer and judge of horses, has provided the opportunity for those who have displayed an interest to learn to ride and show the family horses. Any child who has lived with the Mitsons has had an excellent chance to become competent at everything from gardening to animal husbandry.

Those who prefer to stay indoors are also involved in the work of the farm. After the cows have been milked, the butter is churned and, upon occasion, attempts have been made to produce cheese from that butter. Competence at preparing meals is rivaled by the undertaking of general household repairs. Mr. Mitson is the supervisor of such projects. The arrival of a veterinarian is a rare event, but his visits outnumber those of the plumber or the electrician.

Agreeing that this practical knowledge equips their children in a very positive way for life on their own, the couple talk at length of their concern for more essential and, ultimately this approach becomes the solution. Creating the understanding that everyone is a member of the family, with responsibilities and privileges is a matter of first priority. Smooth integration into the educational system and, later, into the work force cannot be accomplished without this solid support and encouragement. Everyone makes his own decision about when it is time to leave and when that time comes, they go with the knowledge that they will always be welcome to come home.

In recalling the achievements and disappointments of fostering a total of twenty-two boys, Mr. and Mrs. Mitson present a very pragmatic summation. The moments of success and accomplishment however, have more than compensated for times of anxiety and despair. At this time, the Mitsons await the arrival of six additional children and look forward to the experiences which lie ahead. By making the present a little brighter than the past, the Mitsons hope that their children will enjoy a rewarding future.

GARDENING

Ridgetown will help you identify weeds

You don't have to pour over complicated weed books to identify your problem weeds. You can see them in living color at the Ridgetown College of Agricultural Technology's weed garden. "We have more than 100 specimens of common and unusual weeds in our garden," says Clarence Swanton, biologist at Ridgetown College. "Anyone can visit. We try to keep our specimens healthy and growing well so they are good representatives of their variety."

Some people bring their problem weeds with them and wander through the garden trying to find one that looks like it," says Swanton. "This is more interesting than flipping through a weed book. You could call the garden a live, illustrated weed book."

The weeds are either planted from seeds or gathered by students on weed hikes. And, in keeping with their stubborn character, weeds won't always grow when you plant them. "We've had problems getting some weeds established," says

Swanton. "If we don't get a sample young enough, or if it doesn't transplant well, it might not live."

Some hardy perennials such as nutsedge or Jerusalem artichoke can be counted on to reproduce themselves and reappear the following season.

Even when domesticated, weeds won't give up their natural habits. Some weeds grow outside their own plots and start choking the weed beside it.

"The garden requires steady maintenance," says Swanton. "We have to weed it to clarify what weeds we want growing."

There is no charge to use the weed garden, located next to the greenhouse complex at Ridgetown College of Agricultural Technology.

Cembal Publications Ontario Canadians surprised with Australian hockey

The Cembal Publications Ontario Canadians have returned from Australia, and, while they didn't win as many games as they had hoped, they were very impressed by the calibre of hockey, sportsmanship and hospitality shown to them by the Australian Ice Hockey Federation. "Fantastic" was how Paul Rutnan of Stirling kept referring to the Australians. "They just couldn't do enough for us and, while we expected to stay in private homes for only three days, they insisted that we stay there for the whole nine days. They had a bus at our disposal all the time and whenever we had some off time, they had a tour of some kind planned for us. Their Federation down there is first class."

But one of the things that impressed the hockey players the most was the way they were treated on the ice. "It was like we were NHL stars or something. At the start of the games, there were the spotlights, the national anthem and the individual introductions, just like the NHL games. It was a real shock in our first game and that may have had something to do with our poor showing. We just didn't know how to handle that kind of notoriety."

The Ontario Canadians were handed their first defeat in that first game as they went down to a 14-5 trouncing. "We never did feel too bad about that loss because apart from a Swede or two and a couple of Australians, that team was made up mostly of Canadians. It was also a combination of three teams." In their second matchup, the Cembal Publication Ontario Canadians eked out a 5-4 decision on the scoreboard but outshot the team by about thirty shots. "That team had a fantastic goalie or we would have really hammered them."

In the third game, the team was again pitted against a combination team and they lost that one by a 5-4 score. For the fourth and final game, the ten team members were starting to get their legs and walloped their opponents by the score of 10-2.

"Basically, their hockey didn't hold any surprises for us other than the fact that there were so many Canadians on their teams. They play a good, intermediate level brand of hockey in which they skate well but lack puck sense because of their inexperience," said Mr. Rutnan. "Some of those guys didn't start playing hockey until they were fifteen years old, so it's no wonder their skills aren't quite up to Canadian standards. But their kids are working hard and they will improve over the next few years."

One of the major problems the Canadian team found over there was the ice surface itself. "They could certainly use some instruction on how to make ice. Generally, their arenas are smaller than ours too, with 500 fans being about the limit for the arenas. One arena we played in had canvas sides too."

"But don't get me wrong, we thought they were terrific people and we extended an invitation to them to come to Canada whenever they wanted on a similar trip. But they had just had a trip to another country last year and they were still recovering financially from that. It doesn't look like they'll be coming over here for a few years and, if things go right for us, we may return there in about three years. We haven't given up on them coming here, but it may take a little longer than we originally expected."

NOTICE

The Ministry of Natural Resources in Tweed is presently preparing a land use strategy that will ensure that the public's need for:

- Recreational Opportunities
- Organized Parks and Wilderness Areas
- Fish and Wildlife
- Forest, Minerals and other Resource Products
- Roads, Power Lines and other Corridors is satisfied through the efficient use of a limited land base.

Different people have different ideas of how an area of land should be used. One person may consider a certain land area ideal for outdoor recreation, whereas someone else may consider the same area most suitable for logging or mining. These views may seem incompatible, yet logging, mining and outdoor recreation opportunities are essential to the social and economic well being of society. So land use must be planned to resolve these conflicts.

Since the Ministry's programs are for the people of Ontario, YOU are invited to participate in the Ministry's planning.

This fall the Ministry of Natural Resources will be holding a workshop with representatives from municipalities, counties, key interest groups, and other government agencies attending. The purpose of the workshop is to discuss district resource policies and the pros and cons of a variety of concept plans. Also a series of open houses will be held throughout the district in order to solicit public response to Ministry of Natural Resources policies and concept plans.

A limited number of Background Information Reports for the Tweed District are available for public review at the Tweed District Office.

Vankoughnet pleased with first tour of riding

Hastings-Frontenac Lennox and Addington M.P. Bill Vankoughnet has just completed his first tour of the riding in his mobile office; he's pleased with the experience and said that he received a good reaction from his constituents as well. "This is the first time that this had been done in a lot of the riding and people really seemed to appreciate it," Mr. Vankoughnet said. "The parts of the riding that were in Jack Ellis' old riding are used to this but any place north of Bancroft and Lennox and Addington and Frontenac, this is a new thing."

Mr. Vankoughnet said that most of the people he talked to were coming to discuss "routine problems - U.I.C., spouse's allowance, personal problems with government programs. Some people just dropped in to talk or to tell me they thought it was a good idea. Things have been going very well, it's a positive experience."

When people did want to discuss issues, Mr. Vankoughnet said, employment problems and economic issues were at the forefront. The recent media concern over federal advertising was aired quite a bit, he said, as was the price of gas. "I think people are beginning to realize that they should have taken what the Conservative Government had to offer, because at least they knew what they were getting then. With this government they don't know what they're getting," Mr. Vankoughnet is a Conservative and was a member of that government.

Mr. Vankoughnet said that economically, everyone is expecting a tough winter. Hastings Frontenac, Lennox and Addington will be receiving $100,000 under the federal government's job creation program, he said.

Mr. Vankoughnet, like nearly everyone else, is maintaining a low profile on the subject of who he will support to run in the next provincial election for the Progressive Conservatives in Hastings-Peterborough. Incumbent MPP Clarke Rollins has announced his retirement and although there is apparently lots of action going on behind the scenes, no one has yet declared publicly their interest in the nomination.

I definitely will remain non-partisan in that matter. I think choosing a candidate is up to the grass roots, it's not a time for power groups to get involved. I don't think it would be proper for me to throw my support behind anyone. I'm remaining uncommitted and the only one who'll know my vote on that matter is myself."

The tour covered 70 stops in the huge riding over 21 days and ended with a picnic near Napanee on August 23.

NDP holds picnic

Anyone using Vanderwater Park on August 10, may have noticed one of the picnic areas being used by a happy group of young and old New Democrats.

The occasion was the Hastings Peterborough N.D.P. Annual Picnic; this is one event, held each year, where politics is kept to zero, and members get to know one another on a more personal level.

One of the highlights this year was a raffle. First prize, a solid pine rocker, went to Mrs. Donna Forth of Deslor. (The executive plans to go halves with Donna on Wintario tickets, since her luck with N.D.P. draws is so consistent.) Second prize, an Afghan, went to Mrs. Donna Richardson of Belleville. The weather was great, and the turnout for the event increased from last year to about 40.

Hay fever sufferers have only half the worries

Many hay fever sufferers spend the last months of summer trying to avoid the ragweed plant that causes their discomfort, but many have been avoiding the wrong plant.

"Many people confuse ragweed and goldenrod because they flower at the same time - early August to late September," says Dr. Jack Alex, environmental biologist at the University of Guelph. "Only ragweed causes hay fever."

Unlike the bright, yellow flowers of goldenrod, ragweed blooms are inconspicuous spikes of tiny green flowers. Common ragweed is characterized by finely divided green leaves. Giant ragweed can reach heights of 3 to 3.5 metres (10 to 12 feet) with leaves 25 to 30 centimetres (10 to 12 in.) wide.

"Ragweed pollen is made up of protein and it is the particular protein not the size of the pollen grain that causes hay fever," says Dr. Alex. "Goldenrod pollen has a different type of protein in its heavy pollen. This protein affects only a very minute proportion of the population, and then only by direct contact."

The protein in ragweed affects a large percentage of the population. Even in the Muskoka region where ragweed is rare, residents may still suffer from the familiar hay fever symptoms - watery eyes and sneezing.

"Ragweed pollen can travel hundreds of miles on the wind," says Dr. Alex. "The only safe areas in the province for hay fever sufferers are in northern Ontario."

The urban areas of the province, particularly in southern Ontario, are the worst areas for hay fever victims. The weed is commonly found in cultivated fields, fence lines, waste areas, vacant lots, and along stream banks and the edges of woodlands. Ragweed produces new flowers and pollen, even after harvest.

For those who suffer from the discomforts of hay fever, an escape vacation to northern Ontario in late summer will provide relief. If this is impractical, an air conditioner which screens out pollen may help. Severe discomfort should be treated by a physician.

To help others, eliminate the ragweed plants on your property. Don't worry about goldenrod - in England it is considered an attractive garden flower.

GARDENING

European earwig must be dealt with naturally

The European earwig, although a recent import to Ontario, is becoming a serious nuisance to homeowners across the province. Attempts to control the pest with chemicals are only marginally successful, but there are other alternatives, says Rick Wukasch, of the Pests, Advisory and Diagnostic Clinic at the University of Guelph.

The reddish-brown insect, about 19 mm long (3/4 in.), is easily recognized by the pincers at the end of the abdomen. Earwigs prefer moist, dark, cool places, so they spend most of the daylight hours hiding under things, coming out at night to forage for food.

Tender leaves, flower petals and pollen are favorite foods of these insects, but they also thrive on decaying material, such as compost and mulch. Turning compost piles regularly will help reduce this breeding ground.

"Diazinon and carbaryl are two insecticides used for earwig control in home gardens, but they produce very limited results," says Mr. Wukasch. "The insects travel easily from one garden to a neighboring one, so you can't expect miraculous results from sprays."

Traps that appeal to the insects' need for shelter provide the most effective control. Homemade traps can be constructed using two 7.6 cm boards. Make four grooves 6 mm (3/8 in.) deep and 6 mm wide along the length of the board. Place the two boards together, grooved sides facing in, and secure with a rubber band. Stand the traps on end in shrubs, hedges and other earwig-infested areas. Use about 20 traps on the average city lot. Shake the traps into a pail of soapy water at least twice a week.

Tin cans and plastic containers baited with fish oil can be dug into the soil to trap a large number of earwigs. Empty these traps into a pail of water every morning.

Although earwigs live and breed outdoors, they occasionally turn up indoors, usually because they have been brought in by people. However, they are capable of wandering indoors through cracks and other access points by themselves. If you do find them indoors, don't panic. They don't eat clothing and won't damage furniture or carpets.

"One way to keep earwigs out of the house is to avoid bringing things from outside inside," says Mr. Wukasch. "Shake all cut flowers before bringing them indoors. Check the laundry basket if it has been sitting outside and give your clothes a good shake before bringing them in."

IT STILL EXISTS, ILLITERACY

BY GLENN GARNETT

It may surprise you to learn that there are many adults in this community, indeed this country, who don't know how to read. It is a handicap that those living in this media-hyped society can hardly bear. But something is being done about it.

The Adult Reading Program in Kingston is in its third year of operation, and the process of bringing the written word to illiterate adults in the Kingston area continues to be an exciting but arduous process. Carol Blackie, coordinator of the program, was hired by the Frontenac County Board of Education in late 1976 to look into the problem of adult illiteracy in the area and after four months of research filed a report advocating the institution of a program for the sizeable number of those over 18 with sub grade eight level reading ability.

"We contacted the various local social agencies, had a number of interviews, spoke with various government departments and talked to school principals. The principals were able to identify students who were having problems reading because their parents themselves were illiterate," he says of the intensive five months of research.

The study came up with the ball park

figure of 275 people in the Kingston area who would benefit from such a program, and an estimate that about 75 would be immediately able to take advantage of the program.

The Board acted quickly on the recommendations, and appointed Carol Blackie to co-ordinate the program which was initiated in the fall of 1977. At first, the people contacted for the program were those recommended from the agencies that Ms. Blackie interviewed for her report data. But the local media quickly publicized the program, expanding the number of people the program was able to reach as friends and families of illiterate people became acquainted.

How is it possible for illiteracy to exist?

"The reasons are as different as the people who come to us," explains Ms. Blackie. "Some students moved about a lot as kids and found it hard to keep up. Some children had to change languages when they went to school and fell behind. There are cases where there was trouble at home and it was difficult to pay attention in school. Then there are many cases of the person being the oldest child and having to drop out of school to help support the family."

While the reasons for their illiteracy are

BUT SOME PEOPLE ARE FIGHTING IT

varied, the desire to catch up is about the same. One thing going for most of the students in the program is the devotion to it and the energy they put into it.

"They get encouragement from their families and friends," adds Ms. Blackie. "That really helps. The people who get the most positive reinforcement are the ones who stay with it longest."

How do you teach someone 36 years of age how to read? It isn't as hard as teaching younger people, in spite of the popular 'receptive learning minds' theory. Most of the students in the program have enough of a vocabulary and ability to form sentences.

"The biggest problem is providing material relevant to what the student wants to do," says Ms. Blackie. "For example, some students are very interested in getting a driver's licence. So, we supply him with reading material that will help him toward that goal."

Other students want to be able to read stories to their children. For some, newspaper headlines are studied to give the student the ability to find out what is going on around him.

"Another thing we have to overcome is bad feelings toward reading," she adds. "Some think they are too old" to be learning how to read." About a quarter of those involved in the program are completely illiterate. Most have some background in the written word, so, it's a move at your own speed and to your ability program.

"Illiteracy breeds other problems," she continues. "They have to rely heavily on other people. There are some people who have to depend on others to do their banking for them, and that kind of dependency worries them."

The program is purposely set up in a part-time format, because most of the students in the program have to work as well, and the program is designed to fit working schedules. There are eight hours of instruction every week, with two day-time and two night-time two-hour sessions every week.

The students being taught between the grade one through five levels get one-to-one instruction, to speed the progress and to allow the student to gain confidence in a very frustrating and difficult process of assimilating the basics. Once past the grade five level, the students become part of larger classes. Some insist on private tutoring and, while the program can comply with such requests, Ms. Blackie believes group learning is better for the students.

"I think it's good for the student, because he will come to see that he isn't the only one with his problem. The momentum of this kind of experience tends to accelerate learning speed. And besides, it's more enjoyable for the volunteer worker."

Like many special agencies in this area, the fuel that keeps them going is volunteers. At the present time, there are forty volunteers, and about the same number of students. Ms. Blackie says volunteers are in almost constant demand, although the numbers involved now are high.

This summer, there are four students involved in the program, thanks to student grants. One, Jocelyn Downie, is writing reading material for the students in the program. There is a shortage of relevant reading material for learning adults, and Dick and Jane doesn't do the trick if you have kids of your own. Ms. Blackie defines the kind of material Jocelyn is turning-out as "high interest at low level" material, a rather neat trick for a young writer.

Another student, Vivian Templeton, is involved in promoting the learning program, recruiting volunteers and putting together information on the program. Nancy MacMillan is a tutor and is putting together a resource kit for the program. Rene Laba is assembling a slide/tape learning presentation for the student program.

The results-of-the program are highly rewarding according to Ms. Blackie. She hears often of students who feel suddenly liberated and able to do so many things they were unable to do before. The new confidence has turned around more than one life, and she says more than a few new readers have a lifetime of reading to get through and books can't be supplied for them fast enough.

"They can feel better about themselves because they are no longer isolated," she says.

Illiteracy still exists, but the means to end it are at hand.

Poison hemlock invades southern Ontario

Southern Ontario farmers have a new weed to worry about - it's poison hemlock and it's growing in cultivated agricultural land for the first time.

"Poison hemlock has been growing near Ontario city dumps and roadsides since 1876," says Dr. Jack Alex, environmental biologist at the University of Guelph. "However, it wasn't discovered on cultivated land until June - when a concerned farmer sent a sample to the university for identification."

The weed resembles a large wild carrot or Queen Anne's lace, but has smooth, purple blotched stems and finely divided leaves. It is a biennial, reproducing only by seed every two years, and can grow to more than 2.4 metres (8-ft.) tall.

"The toxicity of poison hemlock ranges from one-half to two percent of body weight," says Dr. Alex. "This means that 2.25 kg (5 lb.) of green material - one large plant or two medium-sized plants - could be fatal to a 450 kg (1000 lb.) animal."

The only method of controlling poison hemlock is to hand pull each weed. The taller plants will stand out in an alfalfa field, but a farmer must comb the field thoroughly to spot the smaller plants. Carefully pull the plant, taproot and all, and carry the plant off the field so it won't get mixed up with the alfalfa.

Poison hemlock is not just a problem for livestock grazing in the field; it can also be dangerous in dry cut hay. As a precaution,

Poison hemlock has been reported on farms in western and south-central Ontario. All 22 fields known to contain poison hemlock were planted in 1979 with the seed of the variety Banner alfalfa imported from Washington State. Weed specialists believe this is where the poison hemlock seed originated.

"Farmers who may not have noticed this weed in their first cut of alfalfa this summer should watch for it in their second cut," says Dr. Alex. Contact your agricultural office for identification or send samples to the Pest Advisory and Diagnostic Clinic, Department of Environmental Biology, University of Guelph, N1G 2W1.

Eldoras defeated by Ayr, end season with 25-3 mark

The Eldorado Eldoras travelled to Ayr last Sunday to try and keep their hopes of advancing in the Ontario Rural playdowns alive, but even with a valiant effort that forced the game into extra innings, the team came out on the short end of a 6-5 score. While this game was a much better game on the part of both teams, Ayr continued to get the runs when they needed them.

Eldorado scored two runs in the first, one in the fourth and two in the sixth with Mason and Willemssen leading the Eldoras attack with one home run each. Franks pitched an outstanding game, allowing only five runs, two of which were in the ninth inning. Gray, who pitched in the Eldoras first defeat against Ayr the weekend before, filled in admirably at shortstop while Ringelman put on a one man show in the field as he was credited with eight putouts. But, when the regulation nine innings were completed, the score was tied at five.

In their half of the tenth, the Eldoras failed to score any runs and, when they took the field, it looked like they would shut down the potent Ayr attack. However, with two out, an Ayr batter smashed a ball between two Eldorado fielders for a home run and the game winning run as well.

A busload of spectators accompanied the team to Ayr and everyone felt the Eldorado team played well enough to win. One source was quoted as saying, "We just made a few mental errors that cost us but it was the type of ball that you expect to see in the playoffs." Unfortunately, the Eldoras were eliminated after a season of 25 wins and only three losses, but watch for this team in the future. The team would like to thank their fans and those supporters who also helped in purchasing the uniforms. Mike Haley was also given a special vote of thanks by the team for driving the bus to Ayr on Sunday.

The tests also found that plant populations influenced the size of the onions. As the plant population increased the percentage of small onions increased and the percentage of large onions decreased. Tests with Gladiator onions at 32 plants per metre produced 72 tonnes per hectare of large onions (44.4mm and over) and 10.8 t/ha of small onions (31.7 to 44.4mm).

Thinning onions speeds maturity

Onion growers can speed maturity of their crop without sacrificing size by adjusting the spacing between the plants.

"Being able to shorten the time to harvest reduces the risk of growing later-maturing onion varieties with a high yield potential than some of the shorter season varieties," says Matt Valk, Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food muck vegetable specialist. "Early maturity is particularly important in parts of the province where mid-September frosts are common."

At the Ministry's Muck Research Station near Bradford, researchers planted onions in rows 30 cm (12 in.) apart at seeding rates of 50, 60, 70 and 85 seeds per metre (1.09 yd). Plants were thinned to 29 plants per metre, 38/m, 48/m and 46/m. All plants were pulled September 12.

"Our results showed that a spacing of 32 plants per metre in rows 30 cm apart allowed us to reap the benefits of early maturity, increased yield and improved size," says Mr. Valk.

By crowding the onions, the plants were forced to grow faster and the necks of the plants fell over sooner than with more generous spacing, he explains. This allows the bulb to mature sooner.

"Growers who plant onions at 32 plants per metre can cut a week off their growing time," says Mr. Valk. "In the Gladiator trials, bulbs matured 112 days after

Beautiful Bon Echo

Ontario's little known "other" provincial park has a lot to offer

BY ROSS LEES

There's an alternative to that big provincial park northwest of Bancroft and, to those who operate this alternative, their park has everything Algonquin has, only on a smaller scale, which is not a drawback to them. They see their park as an alternative that, while smaller, adds a more personal touch to the facilities and means that their campers are not crowded into city type camping areas where your nearest neighbour can reach over and add the salt and pepper to your eggs in the morning. The alternative is Bon Echo Provincial Park, and what an alternative it is!

Bon Echo Provincial Park provides the sort of convenience camping that is so big in Ontario right now, even though you may have to wait in line for several hours as the park runs at eighty to ninety percent capacity throughout the summer months. You have the trailer and camper sites on the main park site that give you access to all the traditional amenities of swimming, sightseeing and human companionship plus some of the comforts of home, including laundry facilities. But Bon Echo doesn't stop there. Besides the drive-in sites, you can also use walk-in sites that mean you can drive almost to the sites but you will have to unpack and carry your camping equipment a few yards. Then there are the fringe wilderness or wilderness sites that you will have to hike or canoe to, but that offer the quiet and solitude that many campers from the city like to experience once a year.

For some reason, Bon Echo Provincial Park has been a well kept secret on the part of the campers who regularly visit the park. People who think of camping in an Ontario Provincial Park invariably think of only Algonquin Park (a name that you almost never hear from the lips of the Bon Echo Park attendants) but, as they are quick to tell you, "We feel that once people have experienced our park, they'll forget that other one." I tend to agree.

After having just discovered and experiencing the park, I am planning on returning equipped with some camera equipment and some colour film, a canoe and some free time to really enjoy all of the good things this park has to offer. My tour was a quick one day affair that only scratched the surface, but that sufficiently impressed and intrigued me to make it impossible not to go back for a more in depth look. While the camping, hiking and canoeing facilities are impressive in themselves, that was not what impressed me the most about this park. And I'm not going back just to see the awe inspiring beauty of the park through a camera lens. I want to return because of the many stories, legends and historical data that the camp attendants can't wait to tell you about this park. The Mazinaw Monster is the most recent story circulating in the area and, while you'll hear stories of the "monster" being nothing more than a very large fish that has managed to survive over many years and grow to its present phenomenal size, there are people around the lake who swear this is not a fish. Due to the amount of ridicule these eyewitnesses have been subjected to over their sightings, it is extremely hard to get them to talk about the subject, now, but there is a very interesting story behind this monster, even if it is only a fish.

Add to the story of the Mazinaw Monster the legend of Meyers Cave, a cave

This is the view of the Bon Echo rock as you approach through the narrow. At the bottom of the rock you can see the Walt Whitman memorial that Flora MacDonald Dennison had carved into the stone. The supposedly situated on top of Masinaw rock that is lined with silver, the history and many stories connected with the Bon Echo Inn that once stood on the opposite shore from the rock, the story of a beaver attacking two fishermen in a canoe, and rock formation at the top of the rock used to be what the park attendants called the Indian Head until the chin fell off last year. All along the base of this rock are the Indian pictographs that attract and fascinate so many tourists each year.

you already have some very interesting tales to sift through. But if you stop there, you'll miss the most interesting stories, legends and phenomena of Bon Echo Park.

The Bon Echo Rock, described by some as the Gibraltar of Canada, is an impressive sight in itself. It is said that the rock is 375 feet high at its highest point and that the water in the lake is 475 feet deep at its deepest point. The rock is impressive from the opposite shore but its massive-ness is deceptive from that distance. To really experience the awe inspiring majesty of this spectacle, you should be in a canoe at the base of this monster. While travelling to the rock by canoe or sightseeing boat, you'll be preoccupied with looking up at the cliffs and peaks and you'll likely want to climb to the top and see the sight that has so impressed the many people who have climbed the rock and which still impresses the park attendants each and every time they make the climb. But, once you're at the base of the rock, we suspect that you will spend most of your time looking at the rock from eye level, because that is where you will see the Indian pictographs that still remain one of the great Canadian mysteries.

There are scores of these paintings at canoe level along the rock although, in most cases, you will have to look very hard to see what remains of the Indian drawings. They were done in red ochre pigments and represent men, animals and creatures which cannot be identified. No one can say with certainty what culture produced them, whether they were related to rock paintings or petroglyphs in other parts of Ontario, or what they meant to their creators. One legend is invariably linked with another in Bon Echo Park if you take the time to search for the link. It was believed that these Indian drawings (and one drawing in particular of a man pointing to the top of the cliff) gave clues to the whereabouts of a fabulous silver mine known only to the Indians, but, if that silver does exist, it has never been found except in other legends and stories. Another legend has it that there was a great battle fought between the Hurons and the Iroquois at the rock. Most historians count this legend as fanciful but they do not discount the fact that the rock had some significance for the Indians because of the paintings at its base.

And yet, while you're looking at one of the as yet unsolved mysteries of the park, you are also looking at one of the park attendants' major problems, the preservation of these drawings. It is felt that the paintings have survived many hundreds of years of everything that mother nature could throw at them (although until the secret is finally deciphered, no one really knows how long they have been there) with only a few of the paintings disappearing when pieces of the rock were eroded away and fell into the depths of the lake. Now it is felt that some of the paintings became submerged when the level of lake was raised and, more recently, the park's source of greatest pride has become a source of great shame as tourists visiting the site feel compelled to copy the Indians' lead by adding their initials and pertinent data to the rocks with spray paint. Fortunately, spray paint will not last like the paint the Indians used and these moments of weakness on the part of the tourists can be removed. Still other tourists are so taken with these drawings that they cannot resist touching them. Experts predict that the chemicals on human hands will speed up the disappearance of these paintings, which means that our children may never get to see this phenomenon.

BY BOB TROTTER

Some years ago when the Ontario Milk Marketing Board was suffering great growing pains, I criticized officials of the board for being too arrogant and for not letting the public know what was going on.

I said then that the board needed better public relations.

In a democratic society, justice must be seen to be done as well as to be done. The milk board has spent considerable sums of money to improve its image. I think it has been money well spent.

It is, therefore, time for the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency and the Ontario Egg Producers' Marketing Board to spend some money on public relations. Not only that, it's time the farm leaders on the agency and the board took steps to rid themselves of the arrogance and abuses of power that these boards are displaying.

I have been a staunch supporter of marketing boards for farmers for more than 20 years. They are the only method that has worked to give farmers some clout in the marketing of their products collectively. Goodness knows, some clout is needed in Canada, to curtail the power of the huge food chains.

I would have been the last person to suggest that farmers would allow arrogance, disdain for the public and even defiance of the government bodies set up to help police those very same marketing boards.

From the outside looking in - I am not a farmer - it seems to me that the egg board and the national agency need to get back to the fundamentals that have kept agriculture in this country alive and vital. They need a return to honesty and respect.

Why am I, a chap from the back forty who has always supported farmers, now spouting such heresy?

Watchdogging the OMB

Because an inquiry conducted by the farm products marketing council, a body set up to police marketing agencies, has revealed that CEMA's manager has sometimes defied the council's orders and has even refused to follow policies laid down by his own board of directors.

Now the same tactics appear to be surfacing with the Ontario egg board. It has been chastised by the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board. After two years of attempts, the pullet growers in Ontario have gained absolutely no concessions from the board. A few weeks ago, the board again displayed arrogance and callousness when legal technicalities were used to have the Ontario Farm Products Appeal Tribunal settle the dispute for the pullet growers.

I do not like this legal wrangling. All it does is line the pockets of lawyers and give farmers and their marketing boards a black eye: The public, the consumer, knows little or nothing.

What appears to be apathy today will turn to contempt tomorrow. When that contempt erupts, the farmers will have no one but themselves to blame when the structures for marketing which they so long and painfully built are torn down by an irate group of people who will have taken too much for too long.

This is not an open condemnation of farm marketing boards. I am as much in favour of them now as I was 20 years ago. But justice must be seen to be done. It certainly looks now as though these two organizations are not one whit interested in justice being done or seen to be done. It looks as though the paid officials are chortling with glee, rubbing their hands like an uncious Uriah Heep, defying government officials, consumers and anyone else.

This attitude must change. If Max Roytenberg is going to earn his $100,000 plus per year salary, he had better soften his heart. And Brian Ellsworth, too, in the Ontario situation.

It is just another example of how power tends to corrupt. It is an example of how a good thing, unless those who believe in it can constantly watch it, can turn into a can of worms.

The price of justice is eternal publicity.

Climbing to the top of the Bon Echo rock has to be one of the high points of anyone's trip to Bon Echo Provincial Park. Here, a tour guide talks about the view which is fascinating in that in the upper right hand corner of the picture is where all of the campsites in the main section of the park are situated and yet, from this vantage point, they do not detract from the natural beauty of the park.

Beautiful Bon Echo

Day in and day out, tourists come to this very scenic park to enjoy the beautiful scenery, the sparkling waters of Mazinaw Lake and to view the many different aspects of the rock. Park attendants speak of the rock as the only place where you can see barn swallows nesting in their natural habitat. The rock is most impressive from its base or from its top. Once you get a few yards away from it, it is still impressive but you don't get a true feeling of its majesty.

The Indian pictographs are fast fading into obscurity but, if you take your time, you can spend many hours discovering and discussing these age old relics of the past. In this picture, you see an unidentifiable monster with cloven hooves, drawings of men to the left of the animal and what many people interpret as a whr canoe beneath the animal. However, the park officials are not certain that the true meaning of these drawings has yet been found and, for that reason, they try to discourage any further damage of the drawings. Of late, tourists have been going to the rocks and adding their initials to the paintings with spray paint. The park official feel that the only sure way of preserving these drawings would be to cut out the important pieces of the rock and put them under glass in a museum.

BY JEANETTE MOORE

I've just returned from a two week vacation, and much as I like this resort country where we live, I believe it is a good thing for everyone to get away once in a while to gain a new perspective. One tends to forget there are other little villages strung all across the country where people are involved in communities which seem to them to be the centre of all interesting activity.

My trip was to the Gaspé, but upon returning from there, a short 120-mile trip to Toronto accomplished much the same perspective change, and I highly recommend, for those who want a change but can't get away on a long trip, a visit to Ontario Place.

Perhaps I am one of the last in Ontario to see this marvel the Province of Ontario has built over the lake on the Toronto waterfront. But for any like myself who have not got around to visiting the place, you have a treat in store.

The imagination of the ground plan, the incredibly fantastic play area for the children, the soaring lookout points and walk areas rising high over the lake, the lakeside restaurants where the gulls, ducks and Canada Geese demand their share of the diners' meals and finally the theatre area where involvement with the scenes shown makes one feel he is actually visiting various parts of Canada, all add's up to an enjoyable experience. The day we visited, the film took us on a visit to the western ice fields, for a skate on the Rideau Canal, on a snowmobile ride, skiing and to various other Canadian scenes.

It was a beautiful day with a clean, stiff breeze off the lake and perhaps because it was a first trip and I hadn't anticipated anything more than another Disneyland with commercial aspects, I felt elated by the whole experience.

Sometimes, as in this case, one travels far and returns to find a jewel in one's own backyard.

CONSUMER
CASEBOOK*Buying a house

Keeping up with the Joneses a decade ago meant owning a two-storey house with a double garage in a fashionable suburb. But now, because of rising energy costs and spiralling inflation, families are looking at other types of housing.

While privately-owned, single-family homes are still the most common form of ownership in Ontario, more people are buying condominiums, semi-detached, row and link houses.

In a condominium arrangement, the buyer owns the individual unit but shares upkeep or maintenance costs for common areas with the other tenants in the building. A board of directors, elected by the tenants, establishes rules that each owner is obliged to follow.

When you want to sell your condominium you can sell it to whoever you choose, just as you would a single-family home.

A co-operative, however, is an entirely different matter. When you join a co-operative you are part of a group that has built, or bought, a building or group of buildings. There is one mortgage bill and one tax bill for the entire group.

Each owner pays a portion of the total mortgage and tax bill according to the value of his unit as a fraction of the worth of the whole co-operative. Each member holds a share or certificate in the co-operative and has either a perpetual lease or 99-year lease on the unit. You do not own your individual unit.

Like a condominium, the co-operative is managed by a board of directors elected by its members. Unlike a condominium, however, if one member defaults or cannot pay his/her mortgage, the other members must make up the difference themselves.

The board of directors may also reserve the right to refuse a potential buyer who they feel would not fit in with the co-operative community.

Most people who choose to live in co-operatives usually do so because it is cheaper than privately-owned units and they enjoy the experience of running a large, complex business with others.

Other families have jumped on the renovation bandwagon and bought older homes that need upgrading. Older homes are usually found in established neighborhoods and often contain design features like high ceilings, decorative brickwork and large rooms that are unavailable in most new homes. The drawback, however, is that some expensive and essential parts of a house like the roof, foundations and plumbing may be in need of replacement and repair. It is a wise precaution to have an older home inspected by an expert before investing your money.

Building our own house can often be the best way to ensure that all of your living needs are satisfied. This can be a time-consuming and costly venture but it does give you a chance to see your future home grow from the ground up. You can monitor each stage of construction to ensure that it is being done properly.

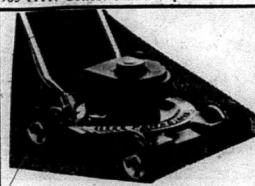

Semi-detached, row and link houses are becoming more popular as housing prices continue to climb. All three types of housing are generally cheaper than a single-family dwelling although they do not allow for the same privacy.

A semi-detached home is defined as a house that contains two separate units under one roof. The common wall means noise from one unit can travel into the other but it also means a reduced heating bill compared to a detached house.

A row house, is three or more houses, usually of similar design and size, joined together. Link houses are similar to row houses except that the attached units are not of the same design and are often linked to each other by garages which allow access from the front to the rear yard.

This is the second in a five-part series excerpted from the Ontario Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations booklet "So you want to buy a house!"

WOODS, WATER, WILDLIFE

BY RON REID

How long will we have caribou?

Usually when we think of caribou, we think of vast herds of those antlered animals plodding across the tundra, providing a food source for northern natives. But a different sub-species of caribou, much less well known, inhabits scattered pockets of the spruce and jack pine woodlands of northern Ontario. A fleeting glimpse of this woodland caribou, as it is appropriately known, is the highlight of any wilderness trip.

Woodland caribou are large, deer-like animals with long legs, occasionally reaching a weight of 500 pounds. With long whitish neck hairs, a grey-brown coat, and a white rump patch, an adult caribou is an impressive sight. Both males and females bear antlers from spring until early winter, but it is the magnificent branched antlers of the bulls, with characteristic flat plates above the forehead, that most readily identify the species.

Sport hunting of caribou is not permitted in Ontario, with good reason, for their numbers are severely depleted. Scattered pockets of woodland caribou, often with no more than a dozen animals, continue to hang on in suitable habitat, but the pressures of civilization bear heavily on these creatures. Caribou depend almost solely for winter food on the lichens growing on rocks and trees of mature forests. A logging operation or a fire, which renews the forest and improves the habitat for some large animals such as moose, effectively destroys caribou habitat for at least 30 years.

The scattered bands of Ontario woodland caribou which still persist are found largely in areas not yet touched by loggers, and where convenient islands provide shelter from predators and disturbance during the critical spring calving periods. Because of their splayed hooves and buoyant guard hairs, caribou are strong swimmers, and water is no barrier to their travels. But unless we set aside large tracts of suitable habitat free from the demands of the forest industry, the real barriers of clearcuts and roadways will spell an uncertain future for one of Ontario's most fascinating large mammals.

The rural legal aid van is parked beside the library in Yarker, with its lone occupant, Jack McCullough sitting behind the wheel. There is nobody else in sight and he knows it might be a slow morning. But the van is there every Monday, morning, 10 a.m. to noon, before he returns to the city. There's always plenty to do there.

McCullough is a third year law student at Queen's and is student co-ordinator of the Queen's Rural Legal Aid service, a summer program sponsored by the Attorney General of Ontario and Experience '80 and designed to bring legal assistance to those far from towns with lawyers and unable to afford legal council otherwise.

"It's very often a slow clinic," he says of Yarker. "But then we're relatively close of Kingston or Napanee here. We go to Northbrook, Tamworth, Sharbot Lake, Verona and other places farther north and we're kept quite busy."

It could be a prime time drama series. Five young and gung-ho Queen's law students travel to the boon docks everyday to hear the problems of those lost in the tangle of government red tape or those getting ripped off. The hours are crazy but the rewards are many. For all the students, it's their first experience in being practical lawyers, dealing with real people with real problems. The program is overseen by Queen's law professor Joseph Dewhurst and two full time review lawyers who examine every case handled by the students and offer constructive criticism and advice.

Mornings like this in Yarker bring everything back in perspective. Few of the cases they handle could even be described as glamorous. Jack lists the more common cases: impaired driving, common assault charges, consumer rip-offs and land disputes. Land is a heavy.

"Land is God to these people," Jack observes. "They have their problems with deeds, easements, wills, taxes - all of it comes back to ownership of land."

The Rural Legal Aid van is part of the larger Queen's Legal Aid program, which consists of 26 law students handling cases through their office at Queen's, or offices in Carleton Place, Belleville or Napanee. I've handled the cases that arise in the smallest communities. The easy part is giving advice from the front seat of the van. But sometimes they work in provincial courts and often have only five minutes notice that they will be handling a case. One law student demurred, "Sometimes we get thrown into the deep end. But we certainly learn to swim very quickly."

"Many people come to us asking about the logistics of divorce for instance how to find out who gets the house and about support payments. It's an all purpose legal service," Jack adds.

The project began in 1975 with the idea of bringing legal aid to an area some believe to be the most impoverished in Ontario-Northern Frontenac and Lennox and Addington Counties. This area, once at the forefront of population expansion, has fallen to the wayside, and the economy has long fallen on hard times.

"The people who lived there stopped thinking of their problems as problems but as life conditions that they could do nothing about," explains Jack McCulligh. "There have never been lawyers back there because there isn't the money to support them."

Unaware before of their rights, law students for the past five years have helped launch numerous appeals to workmen in compensation, unemployment, insurance and welfare, to win for these people benefits they were entitled to.

"There was, at first, some resistance to outsiders," he recalls. "There was an old saying that the Queen's writ doesn't apply north of Highway 7. The program has helped, I think, to break that kind of feeling down. In some places, we're downright popular. You know, sometimes there are five or six people waiting for us when we get there!"

He adds that the image of students rushing around on their summer holidays vanished quickly.

"Law students give that little extra," he insists. "These cases are challenging and we put a great deal of time into them. The enthusiasm is there."

The main office of the legal aid service receives calls collect to answer legal questions, and it is often through this media that the Queen's students are a service to the outlying areas.

Although the service is designed to help those in financial need, Jack says they help where they can. He cites a recent case when a woman asked the service to look into a possible rip-off. A contractor appeared to be overcharging her for work being done to her house. The student lawyers told her that they were unable to take her case because of her financial status, but did the primary research and wrote a letter for her to take to her lawyer. Her lawyer complimented the students for their work, saying it cut his workload on the case by half.

"We'll give advice to anyone. We're quite flexible," adds Jack.

The program is supervised closely and the students don't hesitate to seek the advice of their professors. In all, it's a service badly needed by those far off the beaten track. And it seems the students get as much out of it as their clients do. And that kind of performance hearkens back to an older life - the non-money barter. A fair exchange.

Wizzy singing

country. He gained his love for writing Canadian music after he wrote a song about Grey Owl, an Englishman who became a brother of the Indians and became Canada's first ecological spokesman. Writing that song triggered off his search for other Canadian heroes, and many of them are characters in the songs he plays.

His presentation was simple yet effective. Standing in front of a rear screen slide projector, he sang of the Bluenose, of Coureurs-de-bois, of Wild Goose Jack, (Jack Miner, the man who started the movement to save Canada's geese), and of Canada's beauty, while pictures of Canadian landscape flashed behind him. His pretty wife Roslyn doubled as usher and projectionist for the performance.

His voice is difficult to describe, sometimes straining to gracefully execute the high notes, sometimes effortlessly drifting into a spirited east coast highland drawl for his Maritime pieces. His playing was quite spirited; midway through his performance, he broke a string through the force of his strumming.

While the adults at the concert were impressed, the 'Wiz' had special appeal for the kids and they stayed afterwards to talk with him. After all, here was a man who actually got to talk to Mr. Dressup, Casey and Finnegan. It's an appeal he has noticed all through his tours, and it's a fan club fast approaching record buying age.

"I'm getting to go to a lot of places I've never been before," he says after signing the last autograph. "I find that I'm getting more and more enthusiastic about what I'm singing about, this country of ours."

Wiz might be the first of a new wave - Canadian nationalist folk singers. By sheer force of personality, he sought out the Amherstview Library one recent Friday night was the scene of a gathering of close friends, many of whom didn't know each other before they arrived.

It was a concert by Wiz Bryant, the Penitentiary B.C. man who has decided to make a living of playing his songs about Canada for people across the country. His crowds have varied in size in the three years he has been performing his music, but I believe he will remember his Amherstview audience as one of his smallest. About twenty people filled the corner of the library (we all got in for free because admission was free for the first fifty to come in the door) and the gathering took on the appearance of a social visit instead of an embarrassing turnout.

Anyway, it appeared they were ready for a number of people to show up. One size fits all for Wiz Bryant, we discovered. Bryant is currently on a tour of Lake Ontario regional libraries with thirteen engagements through this month. The 31 year-old lyricist and performer is on the brink of making it, and he's doing it the hard way - in his own country. With the release of his first album last year, 'Ballads for Canada', he began an ambitious effort to promote his music, and has appeared on television in everything from Canada A.M. to Mr. Dressup, on major radio programs, and this fall, in a television film.

The man is quite different from any other performer you've ever seen. He tells me he wants to play for everyone in the country to hear. He's conducting a tour more closely resembling a political campaign, playing for anyone who will listen, in crowds of 500 or more, or for small groups of 20.

His presentation is a celebration of the

Bryant: Canada first

Toronto media and found himself in front of t.v. cameras and radio mikes and has had the unique chance to tell people what he has to say. He is approaching a critical time in his career - he hopes to release his second album, 'Timberline', featuring still deeper Canadian historical references and stories. His song 'Grey Owl' may be picked up as the theme song for a CBC special on the man.

As for this road show existence, he says he is making an ever-growing number of friends and compares him and his wife and little girl to gypsies. And he says the well of material for his songs shows no signs of running dry.

"Thank God for our heroes," he smiles. "Sure we have them. Somewhere along the line we got the ideas that heroes had to be politicians or soldiers. But achieving fame doesn't make you a hero."

The heroes he sings about are men attuned to their environments coupled with a caring for their fellow men, like the first doctor in Labrador, Lord Grenfell, or Grey Owl. You'll not hear a tribute to Sir John A. or Dief, but those songs have already been played to death and without much national following.

As far as reaching national recognition, he agrees he could try to take the nation by storm by playing top 40, but he feels his approach will have more long term rewards.

"Eleanor Roosevelt said that she would rather light a candle than to curse the darkness," he says. "I feel fulfillment playing my songs to people for the first time and talking to them."

Whatever happens from today, he indeed has lit a candle in our community and he showed a side of this country we have not looked at too closely. Sometimes it only takes a candle.

GREEN TURTLE

CHELONIA MYDAS

Returning regularly in great numbers to the same beaches for egg-laying, female green turtles & their eggs have throughout history been an important source of food to local human populations & sea voyagers. This marine turtle was once common in the warm oceans of the world, but has become increasingly scarce in areas where it is commercially exploited. It is still common in Hawaii, but now rarely nests in North America, although feeding areas still have fairly large populations in Florida.

ENDANGERED

There is a major remaining nesting site in the Galapagos Islands and also on Ascension Island in the south Atlantic, to which the females have to travel 2,252 km from their feeding grounds in Brazil. Costa Rica, Malaysia, the Philippines and Indonesia maintain protected hatcheries & regulate the harvest of this species.

Although 58 countries have helped to protect the Green Turtle by joining an International Convention controlling the import, export & use of endangered species, the demand for turtle soup for the gourmet, turtle oil for cosmetics & turtle skin for shoe leather has encouraged a continuing, often unlawful, trade.
